BUFF WYANDOTTES

At Boston, Mass., Jan. 17-21, 1905, was held the Buff Wyandotte Club meeting which brought out all the largest and best eastern breeders and the largest and best exhibit ever made. The Herald Square Winners were there, the Madison Square Winners were there, and Our Winners were there and won their usual Three Out of Five First Prizes, making Five Years in Succession that we have won three out of five First prizes at Boston. This year we also won both second prizes where we lost the first prizes, as follows: Cocks, 2, 3, 4, 5; Hens, 1, 2, 6; Cockerels, 2, 6; Pullets, 1, 6; Pen 1.

Please note our record since 1897, given below, and remember this is the ancestry that keeps our train of this variety at the front, it dont cost any more than the other kind.

GLEANINGS

We have grouped some of the pertinent sayings of writers throughout the country for the consideration of our readers. There is entirely too much of an inconsistent byplay being made on utility vs. standard-bred poultry. The best that can possibly be had must continually come from the ranks of the finest standard-bred stock, the greatest producers of quality of all kinds.

Consistency may be a virtue; if so, but little used. We clip the following from The Industrious Hen, which seems to have gleaned them from the four winds of Heaven.

"A flock of uniformly-marked birds form a beautiful picture on any farm, where profits, ease of keeping and appearances must all be considered."

"When the time comes that egg records are a part of score-cards then the improvement of poultry will really start. Egg records and score-cards are strangers as matters now stand."—M. M. Johnson.

"This craze for double mating will become fixed if the new Standard describes birds rather than breeds and varieties considered as a whole. What we need is an ideal which will allow the little 'back-yard' poultryman to have some show for winning prizes from a single mating."

"We have come to the place where we should distinguish between birds that are valuable for egg production as well as between those valuable for show purposes. There is and always will be a class of breeders who look to utility first and race or breed type afterward. These are breeders in the best sense of the word and they are becoming more numerous every year. Some of these are slowly working for egg-production and breed-type both. It is a work where improvement is made only after the exercise of much patience and skill, but such breeders are going to be the ones who are longest remembered."

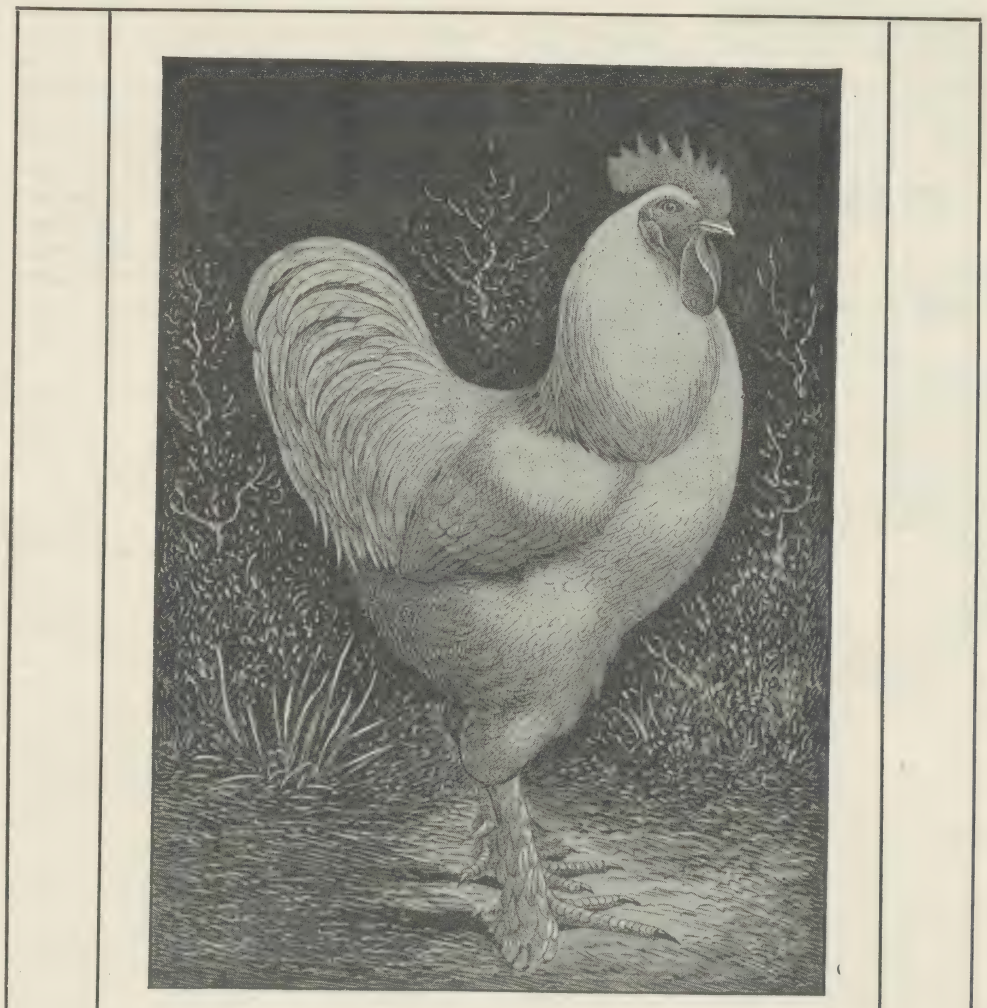
"The day is not far distant when the fancier will be questioned concerning the egg-producing abilities of his flock of females rather than the possible score. The fancier in the West who can breed up a strain of two-hundred-egg hens will not have to look far for a market for his goods. Many prize-winners can not earn their feed in the laying house. The utility bird is the foundation of the whole industry. If one can secure a prolific producer of eggs that possesses fine plumage and good shape he has a treasure. The principal object should be to produce eggs and a plump carcass first and fancy plumage afterward."

In the beginning we had the mongrel or barnyard fowl, then came the breeds and their varieties, built along the lines of more eggs and better market poultry. Originally we had the hens that could produce about forty eggs per year. The above writers seem to have overlooked the fact that all the prolific egg-producing hens, those that have laid at home and in tests the largest number of eggs, belong to some one of our standard breeds or varieties. All that is best in poultry has come from the constant and persistent efforts of the true fancier. With these facts staring us in the face it seems a waste of time for any one to pen the above.

Again, the highest quality in exhibition poultry has been produced by specialists on back lots as referred to above. The true fancier and expert can not be hampered by either space or location. They will succeed no matter what the obstacles may be. Double mating nor triple mating has no horrors for them. Only the incompetent or slothful will be set back by such conditions, and these would fail if they had the vast expanse of endless acres at their command.

Mr. Cook was a lecturer of merit, a successful breeder and the best salesman of poultry we have ever met. We clip the following:

The late William Cook, of England, once said: "It is utility that the keeper of farm poultry has in view. His standard is, or should be, one made up of table qualities, laying powers, and constitutional hardiness. He may attach more or less weight to table qualities or laying powers, according to circumstances, but both must always be kept in view."—Poultry Journal.



With all this Mr. Cook was the most ardent advocate of the highest excellence for exhibition qualities. He willingly paid the highest prices for this quality, and persistently demanded full return for same when offered for sale.

Mr. Geo. E. Bates, of The American Poultry Journal, was the presiding member of the Rochester meetting. We clip the following from his journal:

"Will Purdy breaks loose again in Poultry, our English cousin, and tells its readers some really interesting information. He is down in Texas where the chicken industry is greatly different than in England. He smiles rightly at the American system of judging a fowl's shape when it is in the hand of the judge! There is too much of this done every season. A bird's shape should be scored and deductions made before it is taken from the coop when its whole carriage can be clearly seen. The new Standard will help out on this wonderfully as then the ideal will remain permanent, its elasticity gone forever."

Can it be possible that Editor Bates contemplates having birds judged in the future by comparison with the illustrations in the Standard? If this should be, the liveliest time of our lives is in store for us. We imagine it will equal the riots of Russia and Japan.

If the mother hen and the young chicks are permitted free access to the asparagus beds as soon as you are done cutting, they will eat up that army of beetles that bother you so much. Transfer the mother hens with the coop and the young chicks to the center of the asparagus bed, and the beetles will trouble the grass very little.

WHITE LANGSHAN

Feather Pulling

It is well to consider in advance the possibility of the evil habits that poultry is heir to. One of the most disgusting of these is feather pulling or the habit of plucking and eating feathers from each other. This is often started among poultry that are kept in close confinement and that are idle so much of the time that they do not know what to do with themselves. They notice a blood-spot on any part of one of their pen companions and begin to pluck at it. This is the beginning of the habit. Sometimes only a few begin it; at other times the greater part of the whole flock are given over to the habit.

Last winter we visited a poultry plant where two hundred young cockerels were confined in pens of ten or twelve each, and we here saw a living example of cockerels plucking each other all to pieces, the result of the disgusting habit of feather pulling and eating. When once learned the habit is rarely, if ever, forgotten, and it is just as well to send the whole flock to market and be rid of them, rather than to keep them and have them teach the whole of your young stock the same habit.

Fowls that are kept busy during the winter months digging in deep litter, or that can roam over the fields or about the barns at will, seldom, if ever, learn this habit. It is a habit that comes from being confined in idleness or being deprived of proper exercise.

EGG EATING

Following this is the habit of eating their own eggs among the hens. This comes from the same source as does the feather pulling; it is the result of idleness or, perchance, during the winter months an egg becomes broken, the hens see it and eat it. They like it, and as soon as another egg is in sight they eat that as quickly as possible.

This is best prevented by having the nests so constructed that the hens must go to them out of sight of the other hens. They should be in a shaded spot where one hen will not notice another on the nest, and when the hen comes from the nest the eggs should not be in sight either of the hen that laid them or her pen associates.

Prevention is far better than any cure for this trouble. Do not permit your hens to get the habit or it will greak your heart as well as the eggs before you cure them of it. The only cure seems to be prevention or the hatchet. The cures recommended are as follows: Buy a bushel or two of egg shells from the bake shop and throw them on the floor of the poultry house for the hens to pick and eat from. This, it is said, teaches them that there is nothing in it. Another cure is to buy a dozen or so of china eggs and throw them over the floor for the hens to peck at and learn that they can not break them. We have known both of these to prove beneficial, and would recommend their being tried whenever the habit is acquired, in connection with the darkened or out of the way nest boxes; but if the hens are permitted to lay in boxes on the floor or where the other hens can see the eggs, scarcely anything will break them of the habit.

Editorial Gossip

Hagerstown is in full blast this week. The gathering of the clans and a magnificent lot of poultry, pigeons and pet stock will celebrate the Golden Jubilee of the Hagerstown Fair Association. On every side is heard the statement, "What a pity the old Roman, John L. Cost, could not have seen this special gathering that he looked forward to with such great interest."

"Eastern Breeder" in Pigeon News has a few words to say back to the California breeders of Hen pigeons. He invites the producers of the Pacific Coast to come to New York, Boston or Chicago to meet the Eastern breeders. We do remember that they came to St. Louis, but the Eastern breeders failed to be on hand. We wish that "Eastern Breeder" had signed his own name to the article. We complained last week of the unsigned article from California in the issue of the 15th instant. Let us thrash out the value, pro and con, of the Runt pigeon as an exhibition proposition, and drop the locality squeal and the jealousy proposition. Let us find out what is right, and stick to it. Up to date no one on this side of the point has been able to overcome the eastern breeders of either poultry or pigeons. If it does come let it come as a fair and square proposition.

Too much Johnson from Clay Center seems to have overcome the backwardness of the poultry press in his advocating improvements in advertising. He sowed a full measure and must have reaped an extensive harvest for the article which starts out, "Now since the poultry press," etc., has appeared so many times in so many periodicals that people must begin to know it by heart. Each time the address of the writer and his location is imprinted everlastingly upon the mind of the man who reads the article. Surely this Johnson has been a little "Too Much Johnson" for the poultry press.

Mr. Ely, of The Ohio Poultry Journal, states that he notices the picture of Judge Charles McClave in our Gallery of Fame, and that his only criticism is that our artist makes frined Charles look very gay for one usually so grave. Does not Mr. Ely know that it takes quite an artist to raise a smile on Charlie's face? If we have acomplished this we know Charles and his friends will return thanks.

Mr. Geo. W. Webb, formerly connected with The American Fancier, will judge at the Salamanca (N. Y.) Show the week of January 22 to 25. Mr. Webb is a true fancier, an all-round good fellow, and is worthy of the recognition of the fancy.

Colonel Hughes, the former secretary of the Kansas State Poultry Association, has been appointed adjutant-general of the state, which compels his retiring from the secretaryship of the association. Thomas Owen will fill the position of both secretary and treasurer. The state of Kansas has contributed a considerable sum of money for the benefit of this association, which will pay very large premiums. Please address the secretary for further information.

At the present time the most thought of feature in the life of the breeder of standard-bred poultry for exhibition is how to win the prizes at the winter shows. In our list of show dates are recorded many hundred exhibitions to be held during the coming winter. If we estimate this at four hundred shows with the possibility of an average of one thousand entries at each show, we have the grand aggregation of four hundred thousand high-bred exhibition fowls gathered in hope of winning prizes. To be successful at the present time one must be an expert exhibitor as well as a perfect handler of the breeding stock for the purpose of producing exhibition poultry.

It is our intention in the November issue of The Feather to give considerable notice to the preparation of birds for the show-room. All during the year we have cautioned all breeders of standard-bred poultry for exhibition to carefully attend the growing stock. To have the best exhibition poultry they must be grown from start to finish for best results. One can not take poorly-grown, improperly-cared-for specimens and make high-class exhibition birds of them.

Warm houses are an absolute necessity for preserving the combs and other head properties of exhibition poultry. In the very cold climates it is often necessary to cover the building on the outside with three or four thicknesses of tar paper. This is applied by first painting the boards with hot, boiling tar, then putting on a layer of paper, more hot boiling tar on the paper and in this way lay several thicknesses of the tar paper and boiling tar on the boards, the entire to be finished by nailing down with the tin washers and nails and coating over the whole with melted hot tar. This makes an almost airtight box, which must be ventilated when the days are warm to keep in a proper healthful condition. Houses thus protected with the tar paper and properly ventilated usually furnish sufficient protection to keep the combs and wattles from freezing. If the combs and wattles are permitted to become moist or wet by dipping into the drinking water, they will be easily frosted when the weather is very cold. This must be very carefully guarded against. Never permit your exhibition fowls, or in fact any of your fowls to dip their gills or wattles, or any part of their face into the drinking water, for if they do they are likely to become frosted. If they do become frosted thrust their heads or all the parts that have become frosted into very cold water, and keep them there until all the frost has been removed; wipe dry and anoint with glycerin. Use glycerin because it is readily washed from the head and feathers with water.

Wheat chaff, or chaff of any kind from oats, beans or peas, if perfectly dry, is splendid to place in the scratch pens where exhibition poultry is kept. The constant scratching in it cleans and polishes the shanks. Sand, when clean and dry, is second in value to chaff for such a purpose. Cleanliness of the shanks and the entire plumage adds to the appearance of the exhibition fowl. We have said so much of late with reference to the molting of fowls that we think it advisable to say a few words to the breeders of exhibition poultry. Never feed yellow corn, flaxseed or iron of any kind to the white fowls during the season of molt, if intended for exhibition. Any of these if fed to them has a tendency to darken the plumage and will consequently add to the finish of the plumage of dark-colored fowls. When fowls are in molt the feathers are fed from the blood pores of the poultry. When iron and the other materials are fed, the color of the plumage is intensified, which has a detrimental influence on the white plumage, but which is very good for the dark plumage of poultry.

In fattening fowls intended for market they should be confined in pens or small yards and fed several times a day a liberal supply of very fattening mash foods. Whole grain or cracked corn should only be fed at night. The other meals should be entirely provided from mixed mash foods and plenty of grit must be supplied. A sufficient water supply should always be at hand. This same process should be followed in fattening ducks and geese. Double the weight and improvement can be gained in feeding poultry in confinement in this way within two weeks than can possibly be gained in double the length of time if the birds are permitted to run about promiscuously. Never send poultry to market that is thin. Over-fatted and ill-shaped from being too fat is bad enough, but thin, unattractive poultry brings the lowest price in the market.

From now on fanciers will consider what they will have for their breeding stock next season. First of all, secure the best females you can possibly obtain. Hens in their second year or even the third are better for producing exhibition poultry than pullets. Never use a poor hen for laying eggs from which to hatch your exhibition stock; it is a waste of time, food and money. The best of hens obtainable will produce a sufficient number of culls. Do not, under any circumstances, permit a male bird of inferior quality to live upon your premises. The best is none too good for producers. Poor quality is bound to bring disappointment.

Ground bone, or ground green bone as it is termed, is one of the best winter foods for poultry. About a year ago we published an exhaustive article in the columns of The Feather on the qualities of ground green bone, covering the use of ground meats of all kinds. Every poultry fancier should own a bone-cutter, and every poultry fancier should save every bone and every piece of meat—flesh, fish or fowl—and pass it through the bone-cutter, reducing it to the proper consistency and size for food, and feeding it to the poultry. Nothing will bring better returns for eggs than the careful saving, preparing and feeding of meats in this way.

It is never too early to begin to prepare for winter, nor is it ever too late. If you have neglected placing your poultry houses in proper condition for winter, begin at once and repair the wrong you have done your poultry. Nothing is more helpful in the successful handling of standard-bred poultry than good care and good houses. Do not measure this in expensive buildings, but have the poultry houses warm, comfortable and tenantable for the fowls. Keep things in good shape and you will succeed.

One of our exchanges tells us that broken oil cake is fine for fattening fowls. We do not know anything about this, but we are fully aware of the fact that by the time the manufacturers of linseed oil have ground, boiled and extracted all the oil properties from the flaxseed, there is not much left of a fattening nature in the oil cake. They advise the use of broken oil cake because the ground oil cake is mixed or reduced in value below the broken product. A fine food for fowls of all kinds is to get the cracklings from which the lard has been pressed and the broken oil cake and reduce them to a small size through the bone mill, and feed this mixture to your poultry. It is a good food for fattening, and if too much of the grease is not left in the cracklings it is good for laying hens. The use of this mixture has a tendency to loosen the bowels. For this reason but little of it should be used at first, and then increased as the fowls become accustomed to it. A mixture of the ground oil cake, ground cracklings and corn will make any young stock grow very fast, and fatten quickly for market.

Everybodys Magazine is responsible for the statement that a corporation with a capital stock of six and one-half millions has been organized for the production of strictly fresh eggs out of casein that comes from milk. This proposition will not frighten the poultry fancier or the producers of eggs for market. Whenever man is able to compete with the old hen in the quality of fresh-laid eggs it will have cost so much per egg that they will not be offered for sale, but will be placed in museums to be referred to as the result of misplaced, misguided science. It is possible to make a good substitute for butter out of beef products; in fact, some of the butter thus made is more palatable than the real article from some localities, but mortal man will never be able to succeed in manufacturing fresh-laid eggs that will come anywhere near competing with the natural product.

The dates for the Cleveland Show have been fixed for the week of January 29 to February 3, 1906, and the following judges have been selected to place the ribbons: T. E. Orr, Chas. McClave, Theo. Hewes, T. F. Rigg, Eugene Sites and T. Donkin.

The next annual Stamford (Conn.) Show is announced to take place January 17 to 20. The Armory has been secured for the purpose and the indications are that the exhibition will eclipse all previous ones. R. M. Clark is the secretary and that means excellent service. He has been there before and understands the requirements of the office and knows how to handle exhibits and exhibitors.

Mr. Hugo Freese, of Rochester, N. Y., whose Sure Poultry Remedies have made him famous is still a young man, but a first-class hustler. He writes that he has raised a nice flock of Rhode Island Reds and, what is more, has succeeded in raising a nice mustache, and believes it has added much to his personal appearance. As Hugo was always a rather good-looking boy, the addition of a nice hirsute appendage on his upper lip should make him positively irresistible. We are afraid, however, that his chum, Arthur O. Schilling, the artist, will be jealous, as Arthur has had no success in the mustache-raising line, although he can raise Cochin Bantams as good as the best in the country.

The judges at Canada's great winter show to be held at Guelph, Ontario, have been selected and the classes assigned to them are as follows: Mr. Burgott, all Leghorns; Mr. Oke, Light and Dark Brahmas, Langshans and Orpingtons; Mr. Jarvis, Dorkings, Polish, Geese and Ducks; Mr. Smelt, Hamburgs, Andalusians, Sultans, Silkies, Spanish, French and A. O. V.; Mr. Bennett, Barred White and Buff Rocks and American Dominiques; Mr. Butterfield, White Wyandottes, Partridge Cochins, Games, Game and Ornamental Bantams; Mr. Drevenstedt, all Wyandottes except White, all Minorcas, Indian Games, Sumatras, Javas and A. O. V.; Mr. Anderson, turkeys; Mr. Barber, pet stock; Mr. Wagner, pigeons. Judging begins promptly at 8:30 o'clock the morning of December 12.

The 1905 winter fair of the New York State Breeders Association will be held at the Armory, Syracuse, N. Y., December 19 to 21. Liberal prizes on dressed poultry and eggs with good classification will be offered.

F. W. Corey, manager of General E. A. McAlpin's Rock Hill Poultry Farm, located at Ossining, N. Y., was at Danbury last week and secured some of the choice White Wyandottes exhibited there which he will add to his already fine flock. This new plant is one of the finest in the state and the specialties bred there are White and Partridge Wyandottes, Silver-penciled and White Plymouth Rocks, White Leghorns and Buff Cochin Bantams. Mr. Corey sent a large string to Hagerstown this week, and expects to get a great team ready for Madison Square Garden, New York, in January.

J. J. Anthony, manager of the Aspetorey Farm Poultry Yards, Newburg, N. Y., made his first exhibit of White Wyandottes at Danbury, and did remarkably well, capturing the greater share of the prizes in the young bird classes. This is another new poultry plant to be reckoned with at future shows, especially in the White Wyandotte and White Leghorn alleys. Mr. Anthony is an experienced breeder and fancier and will certainly make good with the liberal opportunities offered him on his new place.

There was a great entry of birds in the popular varieties at Brockton, Mass., last week. The showing made by the White Plymouth Rocks was a surprise, nearly one hundred and fifty birds being cooped, outstripping the Barred and Buffs and also the Rhode Island Reds, the latter mustering very strong in Single-combs. White Wyandottes held up well, over one hundred birds being shown. Partridge Wyandottes mustered over seventy. Silver Buff and Silver-penciled Wyandottes were considerably above the average in numbers. As a whole the American class was splendidly represented at this great Eastern fair.

Over six hundred dollars in cash and other valuable specials will be offered in addition to the regular cash prizes at the Gloversville (N. Y.) Show to be held November 21 to 25. This is the first show to be held in the Glove City in twelve years and promises to be the best ever held there. The many local fanciers in this section promise very keen rivalry in nearly all of the leading classes, especially with the large number of out-of-town fanciers who expect to exhibit at this show.

Mr. John C. Blunck returned to Johnstown, N. Y., last week after a two-month successful circuit on the road. He sold all his exhibition stock to other parties at Dryden and Binghamton and consequently will not take in the Southern circuit. Blunck's Games and Game Bantams have always been attractive features at Hagerstown and will be missed there and so will the genial John, also. "Brother John" is one of those fanciers that everybody likes to meet on the road.

Mr. H. V. Crawford and the Hon. D. Lincoln Orr are going to chum it at Hagerstown, traveling and bunking together. Both have been steady in their attendance at A. P. A. meetings in the five years and usually pull together on most questions before the meeting. Henry Crawford has evidently forgiven "Link" Orr for his Cincinnati flop even if others have not.

There promises to be a red-hot show of Barred Rocks at the next Danbury exhibition to be held in the Hat City November 30 to December 2. It will be the State Club Show and some valuable specials are being offered, including ten dollars in gold for the best pullet. As the competition in Barred Rocks is always very keen at Danbury the coming contest promises to be even more so and will do much to restore to the front the Barred Rock, a place it held for many years until the new Buffs and the popular White Wyandottes displaced it.

The Danbury Fair closed last week with the largest poultry show ever held there. Secretary Borman was compelled to return some entries for lack of coop room. The show was splendidly managed, catalogues were on sale the first day, judging was completed by noon of the second day and all cards and ribbons were up when the crowd arrived. It was a system simple and effective and Mr. Borman and his able superintendent, Mr. Deans, deserve unqualified praise for their work. It was a pleasure to judge such a show; the hard work seemed lighter than it really was.

The Barred Rocks, always strong at Danbury in the past, fell off in numbers and as a rule did not come up to the quality of former years. The old birds were not in the best of feather but several of the coming cocks showed plenty of quality in spite of the poor plumage they were in. Hens brought out a very good pair in first and second, shape, color and head points being fine—barring might have been a little more even, however. In cockerels the first three showed great promise, especially the second, a beautiful little bird, in color very nicely and narrowly barred. First pullet stood out alone, a nice, large, finely-shaped and regularly-barred bird of good color, with sound legs, beak and good comb. The second was similar, but darker in color.

White Rocks were weak in numbers but the winners of blue ribbon fine in quality. Buff Rocks dropped several pegs and did not live up to the Danbury reputation. It is true there were some good old birds not in best of feather, and two very good cockerels and pullets, but as a whole the class was disappointing.

Wyandottes came out very formidably, the Whites being the largest and strongest class we have handled at this fair. The first cock was a grand old bird, white as snow, fine head and comb, good legs and beak and, excepting a lack of depth in breast, a fine-shaped specimen. First hen was white, good in type with second and third close up. First cockerel was a grand bird in size, fine in shape, white in plumage and excepting a rather large comb, one of the best birds of the season; second close up and similar in type; third, a beautiful young bird, pure white plumage, fine head and comb—should make a hard one to beat at late shows when he is fully developed. Pullets had a gem in first, a grand, deep-bodied bird, fine shape,

THOMAS F. RIGG

ONE of the most prominent personages of the western country is Thomas F. Rigg, of Iowa, for years well known as a newspaper man of considerable fame, poultry judge and writer on poultry topics. He is an all-round fancier and one of the representative spirits of the West. His ability as a judge has been recognized all along the line from Kansas City to Boston. Certainly our artist presents him to our readers after a fashion that must be the envy of all.

good head and comb and pure white plumage; second was smaller but close to winner and bound to be in the running at any show; third was very white, good, sound legs and beak and nice shape. There were several unplaced ones good enough to win at most shows. There were no Buff Wyandottes shown and only a few Blacks. Partridge Wyandottes, a very good lot, notably first and second hens which were strictly high-class. Cock birds were not in the best of feather but first was a winner in any company. Cockerels in first and second looked very promising. First pullet fine in shape and penciling and alone in the class as far as quality was concerned, although several of the younger indicate future greatness. Silver Wyandottes were a really fine lot as far as females were concerned, the hen class being small but full of quality, the pullets exceptionally fine, first being a beautiful bird in style and shape, openly laced in nearly every section; second was another fine, open-laced one, but little behind the winner. The males were not in good feather and hardly up to the females as a rule in quality. Golden Wyandottes were a good lot with Brimdage getting all the honors. It was a treat to handle such a lot of high-grade specimens of a breed that is being shamefully neglected.

The Rhode Island Red fever has evidently not struck Danbury yet, only six birds being shown. Javas were also weak in all departments. Partridge and Golden Plymouth Rocks furnished the novelties in the American class.

Asiatics were rather light in numbers, only two Light Brahmas being shown. Dark Brahmas were very good in quality; Partridge Cochins fine with keen competition; Langshans few, but Buff Cochins good.

Leghorns were strong in Browns, Whites and Buffs and especially so in Rose-combed Buffs. Some good Black Spanish, Andalusians and Minorcas made up a good Mediterranean class. Polish class showed up strong, the competition in Goldens making Senator Nichols work like a beaver to get the awards placed, but "Uncle David" got there, in good style. Thirty-four Golden Polish is a record entry. The rest of the Polish were good in quality.

Hamburgs were not as numerous as at past shows, but some fine quality in the Penciled and Black varieties made up for the lack of quantity. Houdans had good classes with Dorkings averaging well in quality.

Both Buff and Black Orpingtons were strictly first-class. Games only had small classes but averaged good in quality. Indian games were few but winning cock, hen and pullet were top-notchers, grand in shape, size and lacing. "Billy" Cord's Buff-laced Indians attracted much attention. They look like "comers" and may be quite popular when better known.

There was a big display of ornamental Bantams, Buff and Black Cochins being particularly strong, as were Golden Sebrights and Light Brahma Bantams. There was much quality in these classes and the competition was consequently very keen. Game Bantams were not very strong, the quality being chiefly in the winners of first in Black-reds and Red Pyles. The total number of bantams shown was two hundred and forty. Ducks, geese and turkeys averaged fair in numbers and good in quality. Pheasants, a grand lot, forty-four specimens being shown in the eight varieties entered.

SHOWS AND SHOW REPORTS

Mineola Fair

The poultry department of the Mineola Fair, held September 26 to 30, was a fine gathering for a country show.

The world-renowned "Billy" Stanton placed the ribbons on the American classes and pigeons, while Charlie Smith, the Cochin Bantam sage of Brooklyn Hills, gave away the money on the Asiatics and bantam classes. Not a kick was coming in either case. Mr. Robertson managed the show first rate and Spratts Patent people did the cooping and feeding.

Many of the strings were away, hence there were not so many birds exhibited as last year, although about one thousand turned out. Neither was the quality, as a whole, so good. But some of the classes showed up well and quite a number of birds would win good places at The Garden. The White Indian Games exhibited by Rosemary Poultry Farm were as good as seen at any show. White Rocks were a hot class, M. P. Turner having refused $75 for the first cockerel. The first and second Buff Plymouth Rock cockerels were crack-a-jacks and so was the first cock. First pen also showed good quality.

First and second Golden Wyandotte hens were dandies and Billy Stanton had to look twice to put the ribbons right. The first cock was also a finely-colored bird. Light Brahmas were a slim class, but the first pen showed up well, only one pair of Partridge Cochins and one White cock were shown.

Buff Orpingtons were very scarce, not nearly so many or as good ones were there as last year. The American Dominiques one could pick up in any barnyard for fifty cents apiece. The Rhode Island Reds were a real hot class. Nice red birds were shown. H. W. Billard's exhibit of Single-combed Black Minorcas was of remarkable quality. He took every first and second in the variety in good competition. His first and second cockerels promise to be wonders and his old fowls are show-tested exhibition stock, having won at the hottest shows. Single-combed White Leghorns were very good in quality.

Dr. Paul Kyle's Rose-combed Brown Leghorns were all fine birds and Rosemary Farm's Single-combed Browns were as good as can be had, Mr. Clark, the manager, having bred them in line for fifteen years.

There was the usual assortments of miscellaneous stock, some good, some bad, and others indifferent, but the banner class of the show was the White Wyandottes, fourteen cocks, eleven hens, fifteen cockerels and eighteen pullets in the open class, while seven pens were shown.

First cock from Hillside Poultry Yards was way above the rest; a fine bird; as good a head as can be seen but in full molt and man-scared; will win at any show. Second and third winners were from Daisy Poultry Yards. Good breeders but not show birds. The prizes for the hens went, first, to Willmount Farms, a dream, worth $50 of any man's money; pure white and fine shape. The second was won by Sidney Y. Sullivan; a nice, shapely bird but small. The third winning hen was owned by Henry W. Underhill; a nice, big hen.

In the cockerel class the first was won by Wm. W. Titus; a fine, shapely bird, well placed. The second was won by Sidney Y. Sullivan; the making of a beautiful cock, pure white. The third belonged to Willmount Farms; a nice bird, but undeveloped.

The pullet winnings were as follows: Willmount Farms; a nice, shapely, little bird; will have to grow to win again. Second, Rosemary Farms; a grandly-developed bird; will win almost anywhere. Third, Wm. W. Titus; a nice, little bird.

The prizes for pens were awarded as follows: First, Rosemary Farms; probably the best pen of Whites ever shown at Mineola; a fine cock and large, shapely hens. Second, South Side Farms; good, big birds. Third, Geo. H. Smith. Altogether there were eighty-three Whites shown and many good birds did not get a place.—Herbert B. Rowedders.

Game and Ornamental Bantams

The Game classes at Mineola were the finest ever shown on Long Island. Black-reds had the largest entries. The winning cock was a close, hard-feathered, high-station bird, showing all the points that go to make a real good one. The second was a good breeder, but lacked shape and top-color a trifle dark. First and second cockerels were good ones, and will go further along the circuit and hold their own. First hen was a real gem, and good enough to win anywhere. Second hen close on her heels, and except for her age it would have been hard to pick the winner. Pullets, five grand ones, the best ever entered at this fair. First and second had nice light top-color, good shoulders and reach. Third pullet was a trim-built, gamy one, but too much red on wings. Pyles, small class. A grand cock, fine shape and bright top-color, got the blue ribbon. First hen, a nice bird, had fine color, good reach and gamy look. Golden and Silver Duckwings had classes filled; first cock and first cockerel looked like father and son; good color, station and reach. The same can be said of the hens and pullets. They all seemed to be of one family.

There was an extra fine lot of Buff Cochins; first cock, a Game for shape, color and heavy feathering. Cockerels were a grand lot, first and second being placed where they rightly belonged. First hen was an extra good one and first pullet a wonder; the best one the writer has seen in a long time. Blacks and Whites showed shape, color and all the points that go to make grand exhibition birds. Japs made a large entry and were shown in the pink of condition. Taken as a whole, they were a fine lot. Their breeder deserves great credit for having them so near perfection. —Isaac Keator.

At Poughkeepsie

Orpingtons were represented by good fair entries in Buffs, Blacks and Whites and some good ones in each color.

Polish were out in force. All varieties were exhibited and in some of the varieties goodly entries—from good to extra good ones in nearly every variety—about the best White-crested Black cock we ever handled.

In Single-combed Leghorns there were shown Brown, Buff, White, Black, Dominique, and Duckwing. The third mentioned had large entries of good birds, and while not so large an entry in the balance of the varieties there was quality in the Blacks and Duckwings. The latter we consider a very pretty variety.

Minorcas were well represented in Single- and Rose-combed Blacks with some good birds among them. Three good pens of young birds were exhibited, the pens best developed winning. Some good old birds were shown in the single classes. First hen was decidedly the best in shape with tail carried low. The second hen was in the best condition but too deep in body for her length, with the tail carried too high, and expanded like a Leghorn with too much comb and wattles for our American Standard, but a good hen of the English type. White Single-combs were a good lot all through, and some fairly good Rose-combed Whites were shown.

Games had comparatively a small entry, yet most of the varieties were represented by a few good birds. Game Bantams had a large entry with some fine ones in Pyles and Black-reds particularly. In most cases we considered the old birds better than the young, yet some very nice chicks were shown, but many of the old birds could go anywhere and make a strong bid for the money. All the varieties were represented and the competition was very keen.—T. B. Zimmer.

Cambridge

Again Cambridge has held one of the largest of all the fall shows and the largest Cambridge has ever known. Over two thousand two hundred entries were listed of which over three hundred were pens. The quality was better than ever before and hardly a poor bird was shown.

As usual Sherry was on hand and a chicken show without him at Cambridge would be like a circus without any band. His family was with him this time and he behaved better than usual. Oliver, Bunn, Houser, Braun and a host of others were in attendance and all seemed to have a beautiful time, although it was rainy the forepart of the week.

The poultry buildings are a disgrace to the association, and but for the kindness of Mr. Norton, the secretary, the poultry display at Cambridge would not amount to any more than it does at other agricultural fairs. Why the association does not erect a building that would be a credit to it is hard to understand. The poultry at Cambridge is one of the greatest attractions at this great fair. A crowd can be seen around it from morning till night, while at the same time there are only a few stragglers around the other livestock.

The judges were A. T. Pierce, John D. Jaquins and N. V. Wilbock. Pierce always gives the best of satisfaction, and is very popular with all the boys. Jaquins is a new one here but also pleased the exhibitors in all his classes. "Jack" promises to be one of our most popular judges.

Some of the American classes were not so large as they should have been but the quality was grand in nearly every class. In Buff Rocks the cock in first pen of old and cockerel in first pen of young were as fine as ever shown anywhere. In Buff Wyandottes the first cock, first and second hens, first and second cockerels and first and second pullets were fine ones. Some of the unplaced cockerels promise to be better than the winners when more developed. The same can be said of the pullets. American Dominiques were a large class and the winners were all right. The Rose-combed Rhode Island Reds shown by Willis Crandall were good enough to go anywhere. Asiatics filled many coops. Dark Brahmas were a beautiful class of thirty-five birds and were the finest seen at any show in a long time.

First prize Buff Cochin hen was a beauty and the best Buff bird in the show. In Brown Leghorns, as usual, Liddell walked away with many prizes, but he did not get nearly what he should in the open classes. The Brown Leghorns were bad judged. White Leghorns were the finest ever shown at Cambridge. The first prize cockerel was a beautiful one and was just about right every way. This cockerel could win anywhere. The first prize pullet was just about as fine. Horace Bump again walked away with the majority of the prizes. This makes every year since the fair was started that he has done the trick, and if any one beats him at Cambridge they will need to have "hot stuff." Horace was a very happy man and came round Thursday afternoon with his pockets filled with grandstand tickets.

Buff Leghorns were another exquisite display. "Andy" McMillin won every first prize and was easily entitled to all he got.

Some nice Minorcas were shown and Mottled Anconas were a large and very nice display. Some very nice Dorkings were exhibited. The Black Orpingtons shown by Crandell were fit to win anywhere, and the first-prize cock was the best I have ever seen.

The Games were a show all by themselves. Richards, Dennis, Burn, Oliver and Exmoor all showing fine strings. Cornish Indians were another grand lot of forty-six birds. Polish were first-class and were a nice show all by themselves. Hamburgs were another fine show, the Silver-spangled being especially fine. Earl Wilson exhibited some of the finest ever seen at Cambridge.

Bantams were "all to the good" and the awards were pretty well divided between Burn, Sherry, Oliver and Smith. Turkeys, ducks and geese were a good show. Pigeons made up a very fine display. The Cavies shown by Smith were very pretty and attracted much attention.—Andrew Riddell.

Pigeon Notes

We notice that some of the pigeon clubs are criticising the winter showing organizations for not furnishing better coops in which to show the pigeons. We can remember when bantam fanciers had to furnish their own coops and pay just as much entrance fee as was paid by the standard-bred poultry. Pigeon exhibitors have always paid a less entrance fee than poultry exhibitors, and are always clamoring for better facilities. The bantam people fought the fight and have gained equal conveniences with other poultry in almost every show in the land. If the pigeon people will join together and demand their rights equal conveniences will be provided them.

In Pigeon News is the following statement from Mr. Noonan. He says that he has just weighed two pairs of young white Maltese Hen pigeons and that they weighed at twenty-four and twenty-six days old one and one-half pounds each, and that this pair had raised seven young since the first of April. We know of one breeder who has half-bred Homer Hen pigeons that average fully this much for their squabs when sent to market.

It is astonishing the number of quarts of water necessary for a dozen pairs of pigeons with young in the nest.

An overpowering influence frequently creates a desire to have ten times as many pairs of pigeons as we have room for. Begin with a few, learn the business, and raise your own increase by keeping squabs for the first year, at least, selecting the best of them to replenish and increase your loft the second year. Make haste slowly in the squab business, study the problem thoroughly before attempting to be an expert.

Twenty pairs or less are quite sufficient for any beginner. Six or ten pairs are quite enough for any one to attempt to handle the first season, who has never cared for pigeons before.

An old breeder said to us a short time ago that if he raised eight or ten pairs of exhibition birds from a loft of twenty-five pair, he was thoroughly well satisfied. With the high-class specimens one need not hope to do even as well as this.

EGG MAKING MACHINE

The improved Standard Bone Cutter is a veritable "Egg Making Machine." It helps the poultryman double his egg supply. Cut green bone contains all the elements necessary to make eggs--lots of them. The takes the green bone and prepares it in its best form for feeding—does it automatically. Simply put the bone in feeder, turn the balance wheel, the cutter does the rest, and gives you a feed rich in albumen, phosphate of lime, and phosphoric acid—the chief ingredients of eggs. It will make and save you money every day, and keep your poultry healthy. Write today for free catalog, prices and our original Trial Plan.

Another New Addition to the Prairie State Line

THE PRAIRIE STATE Jr. A Low Priced Good Incubator

In August we called your attention to the New Prairie State Colony House Brooder; in September we created a sensation with our New Universal Hover—they were both "winners." This month we are presenting our pet, THE PRAIRIE STATE JR. INCUBATOR. We call it our pet because it is the perfected result of years of expert experimenting to produce a machine which we can stand right square back of and yet sell at a low price—one in fact worthy the name PRAIRIE STATE. The JUNIOR is the outgrowth of a constant demand on us for a cheaper machine. It is built to help the beginner get into a profitable business for very little money, and is so constructed that it hatches good broods in the hands of the most inexperienced, while it meets every demand of the exacting expert. It has improvements no other low price incubator ever had. For boys and girls it will prove a money-maker—will not disappoint them. Write for our new Jr. catalog; also ask for the new Brooder catalog. They are both FREE and chock full of new and novel ideas.

Volume XXIV — Washington, D. C., October 21, 1905 — No. 626

THE HAGERSTOWN SHOW

B. A. BETTS
Superintendent of the Poultry Department

The entry at Hagerstown in round numbers was forty-three hundred, by far the largest display that has ever been gathered on the Hagerstown Fair grounds. Senator Betts, superintendent of the poultry department, is to be congratulated on his first effort to manage that section. He and Mr. Spahr covered themselves with glory, and the senator found his way into the hearts of the several hundred poultrymen gathered there. Hagerstown has been great, but will be greater in the future with such a progressive, up-to-date poultry department.

The judges at Hagerstown were Geo. O. Brown, J. H. Drevenstedt, D. A. Nichols, J. Fred Crangle, Charles McClave, Stephen T. Lea, Wm. J. Stanton and Henry Tieman, eight in all. These eight experts passed judgment upon the forty-three hundred entries and their work was not complete at 4:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon, when we left the grounds. There should be some means devised to obviate such delays. Some of the exhibitors left for home Friday morning without knowing what their specimens had won.

From Asiatics to pet stock the classes were large and the quality superb. The association created the John L. Cost memorial cup, this cup to be awarded to the best cock, hen, cockerel and pullet of Light Brahmas owned by one exhibitor, and which if won twice is to become the possession of the winner. Mr. Nettleton, of Connecticut, won this time and holds one right to the future possession of the cup.

Brown Leghorn row was the most exciting portion of the hall. They came from in and about Washington with an endless supply of beautiful Brown Leghorns to compete for the prizes, and to fight the battles over again in a pleasant fashion in the aisles after the ribbons were up. Since '83 the writer has been more or less connected with the standard-makers for this variety, as well as the Brown Leghorn Club, not as a member, but on the Advisory Board, and there are just as many opinions, with as many differences, and with just as many opinions about placing awards as there are judges to pass upon them. This we think quite fortunate, for if every one looked at the matter in the same way the interest might lag and Brown Leghorns would not be so popular. We doubt if there has ever been a better or more attractive gathering of Leghorns in a fall show, not even excepting the St. Louis display. All the winners in this class were superb specimens. We can not refrain from complimenting the winning pen from the double fact of its quality and because it belonged to an amateur and a lady.

The second feature of interest was the water-fowls and turkeys. Never in all our experience have we met with so many Embden geese of such excellent quality as at Hagerstown this year. The judges and members of the water-fowl association all united in praising them for their excellence. In this same building was a grand collection of Bronze turkeys, principally from the yards of Wm. H. Van Sant, of Annapolis, Md., who also won considerable honor in the Barred Plymouth Rock classes. Mr. Van Sant has turkeys and Plymouth Rocks that any one could envy.

In White Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks, in fact, in all the Wyandotte and Plymouth Rock classes, were hundreds of specimens of the greatest value. F. W. Corey, of Rock Hill Poultry Farm, was a large winner in these classes. Mr. Corey has gathered together a string of fowls that are worthy of consideration. August D. Arnold had the greatest lot of Columbian Wyandottes on exhibition that we have ever seen. He showed three pens of these, and although they stood next to the Light Brahmas, they were not injured in comparison with them. Mr. Sumner, of Kensington, Md., was another exhibitor in Columbian Wyandottes, and won six prizes on six entries.

Up to the time of going to press we have not received the list of awards, and beyond the above statements are unable to give individual references as to quality of the winners. It is enough to say that all the Asiatic and American classes were filled to overflowing with quality. Polish made up a wonderful collection, and the Hamburgs and Game fowls were almost equal to the New York displays.

In Bantams there were more, if possible, than we have ever seen at Hagerstown. Every kind and character of bantams recognized in the Standard and quite a few not recorded therein were shown. The enthusiasts were there. The Game Bantam breeders, the Ornamental Bantam fanciers and their friends gathered there to consider the past and future of the Bantam Association and to calculate on what might happen at the great winter shows. Mr. Cornman, leader of the Game Bantam Club and ex-president of the National Bantam Association, requested that we call the attention of all the fanciers to the fact that the Glasgow memorial was not yet complete, and it is to be hoped that all the Game Bantam and Bantam fanciers, with the pigeon fanciers as well, will take hold and join with the committee to finish collecting the funds.

In pigeons there was never the like at Hagerstown. For the first time we believe the gathering of pigeons here resembled in character the display at Allentown. The competition was keen, and the fanciers were happy. There came to Hagerstown a new aspirant for honors in Pigmy Pouters, the Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts, of Washington, D. C., C. E. Schofield, proprietor. They covered themselves with honors, winning the greater portion of the awards in the keenest competition. Personally, we were attracted to the Runts and the cross-bred Mondaines, and other kinds of squab breeders on exhibition. We shall hope to find space in the near future to tell more of this.

While at Hagerstown we had extended to us the courtesy of the Conococheague Club through an invitation of Senator Betts. This is a pleasant spot for strangers in a crowded city, but as Colonel Dodge said, if you should gather together all the courtesies of the world and bring them in a bunch to Hagerstown the kindness and sociability of the people in and about Hagerstown would so overwhelm all the balance as to make the comparison unnecessary. The banquet, the club meetings, the meeting of the American Poultry Association all combined made Hagerstown this year one of the most interesting of all the meetings ever held there during the entire fifty years of existence of the Hagerstown association.

The Banquet

GEORGE O. BROWN

Mr. T. F. McGrew presided as toastmaster at the banquet at Hagerstown and filled the position to the queen's taste. Col. Buchannon Schley delivered the address of welcome. He said in part that "poultrymen were no strangers in Hagerstown. It was a case of chickens coming home to rest in warmer nests than ever before. A warm welcome was extended to the citizens of other states by Maryland, My Maryland. Poultrymen have always been a strong contributing element to the Hagerstown Fair, and their efforts had succeeded in making the display one of the greatest of the fall shows." Col. Schley paid a well-worded tribute to the late John L. Cost, and, at his suggestion, a silent toast with the empty glass was drunk to his memory. He further said Maryland should be put in the same class that a Kentuckian claimed for his state when he said "the women are so beautiful they are the envy of the angels; the horses so fleet they rivaled electricity; whisky of such a quality as to make intemperance a virtue."

Toastmaster McGrew made a neat reference to the Kentucky idea and said he wished he had the musical ability of a Beethoven. "Fifty years ago the banner of the Hagerstown Fair was thrown on the outer walls. We are here to celebrate this anniversary—representing fifty years of growing continuous success." He then called on Mr. T. E. Orr for "The Growth of the Fancy." Mr. Orr said his toast was illustrated by the assemblage present when nearly two hundred fanciers were gathered to celebrate the event. The show illustrated the growth of the fancy. He then told of the early events of the shows when Judge Brown first commenced to judge at the place alone. He advised all to stand together to help make the A. P. A. what it should be. Fancy and commercial advocates should also stand together. The best success of both depended upon it. Six states have produced $130,000,000 in poultry products in a season. Commercial poultry keeps pace with the pure-bred.

"The Great West" was responded to by Mr. Thos. Rigg. He said he came from far beyond the great Mississippi expressly to visit the Hagerstown poultry show. It was not often that Western men were attracted East, but he had found such a beautiful country and had so many courtesies extended that he felt like staying here. He said his part of the country "grow'ed hogs, corn and a certain brand of political votes, mostly Republican. The West is the bread-basket of the country." He told of the agreeable exchange that existed in products between the East and West, and talked of the greatness of the poultry exhibit at this fair. "Iowa," he continued, "was yearly taking more interest in commercial and pure-bred poultry."

"Hagerstown" was the next toast. Col. Dodd responded. He commenced in a reminiscent way, telling of his first memory of the place which was that of being led around by his parents at a fair and eating a chicken sandwich, which was probably the seed sown that brought him into the fancy. Virginia was noted for its hospitality, but Hagerstown outdistanced her. He told what a great Gretna Green Hagerstown was and how loving couples came in from Virginia and were joined in wedlock in Hagerstown. He said, "Hagerstown, fanciers, is yours! Young men display your chivalry. Spit on the man who does not salute you, shoot the dog that does not wag his tail in welcome to you." He then recited a little epitaph that simply brought the house down. "Stand together to make your fair a success," was one motto given by him. He paid a glowing tribute to John L. Cost, and then painted a word picture of Hagerstown and its surrounding country that held every one spellbound, and made all feel that they were sojourning in the very midst of paradise or the Garden of Eden. The applause at the conclusion of his toast was deafening.

D. Lincoln Orr, in response to "New York State," started out by saying he found some of his birds outclassed at this great show. New York had a famous president of the United States, and according to what some people said an infamous ex-president of the American Poultry Association. He was glad to see that Western men came to the East and won prizes on the birds they had bought in the East. He finished by saying much of the work on the new Standard was done in New York State—but the criti-

Editorial Gossip

Hagerstown Fair has come and gone in a blaze of glory. The new management has gained the confidence of the exhibitors, and under the direction of Mr. Spahr and his well-trained corps of assistants, things went along quite as well as before. Over forty-three hundred entries were cooped and handled, almost double the number usually entered, a splendid tribute of respect to the former superintendent, and a tribute of confidence to the new.

There are a number of features that need improvement in the poultry department of the Hagerstown Fair. Mr. Betts, the new superintendent, fully realizes this, and will be strongly supported by the board and management in whatever changes he is satisfied will be of benefit and advantage to the exhibitors. It is quite refreshing to learn that they had thoroughly grasped the situation, and were even more familiar with the improvements needed than one would deem possible from experience gained from one exhibition. We are in position to say to the exhibitors of the whole country that another year will find many more features of advantage than ever before offered to those who go as exhibitors to the poultry department of the fair.

All who are interested in poultry are urged to begin at once to prepare for Hagerstown next October. Tell your neighbors and your friends of the glorious time open to them in that locality, and urge them to grow the best specimens possible for another year, and to be present themselves. The parade, the banquet, the enjoyable features of the locality offer inducements that can not be had in any other portion of the entire country for a week's outing, enjoyable sport and financial gains so freely given by the great Hagerstown Fair Association.

There were many individual exhibitors represented at the Hagerstown Fair; they came from eighteen separate states and Canada. The awards were liberally distributed throughout the entire country. There seems to be but little inclination to criticize the awards. The judges came from New England, New York, Ohio, South Carolina and Maryland. Each of these seemed to be fully equipped to do the work assigned him, and while there were some differences of opinion as to quality in some varieties, it was quite satisfactory to know that these differences were so slight as to cause but little comment among the exhibitors. The only reasonable complaint that was made, was against the unwarranted delay in placing the awards. Some of the work was not finished until Friday afternoon. This need not have been, and the opinion of those in authority was that it never would be again.

There was a new exhibitor in the Brown Leghorn classes. Miss Pitchlynn won first on a pen of brown Leghorns of remarkable quality. In pigeons, the Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts swept the deck with a string of twenty-four specimens of the highest quality. Mr. August Arnold had three pens of Columbian Wyandottes that would astonish the whole country. The new variety, Silver-penciled Plymouth Rocks, were strongly represented; White Wyandottes and White Plymouth Rocks, astonishingly large classes that contained remarkable quality; White Leghorns, Hamburgs, Polish Games and Bantams of all kinds gave added credit to the poultry fraternity from the many localities from which they were gathered.

The pigeon display was seldom if ever equaled at a fall fair gathering. Allentown, Pa., and Hagerstown, Md., have the largest display of pigeons. It seems proper to state here that the news has been received of the sudden death of Mr. Robert Fulton, of England, one, if not the greatest pigeon fancier of the world. The Book of Pigeons by him is almost as well known to the pigeon fraternity as the Bible is to the church. Mr. Fulton was a born fancier. He stood in the front rank in all things pertaining to pigeon culture. There are but few of the Old Guard left, sad to relate, and they are going fast.

Evidently theories on poultry interests are even older than the breeds. Theories and poultry raising on paper are genial twins. If figures won't lie it has been repeatedly demonstrated that one can lie with figures. And some of the present-day poultry-information distributors do not have to use figures even to illustrate their reckless methods of handling the truth.

The November issue of Cosmopolitan is just at hand. No monthly magazine is superior to this. Every person fond of good literature and fine magazine stories should send their subscription for The Cosmopolitan and The Feather, both of which we are able to furnish one year for one dollar. Send your application for our new catalogue of premiums of value to be distributed to those who collect subscriptions for The Feather and The American Fancier. We can also give clubbing rates for a number of family magazines. Full information will be found in the catalogue above referred to.

The picture on the front page of October 7 of this paper was greatly admired by the exhibitors at Hagerstown. This was made by a young aspirant to artistic fame, Mr. E. B. Fox, of New York. Orders for his work may be sent to this office. It is also a pleasure to compliment the English artist, Mr. A. J. Simpson. Samples of his work, recently published in English journals, tell absolutely that a worthy successor of the great and only Ludlow has come to replenish the earth with more beautiful illustrations of poultry than have been seen before.

A very pertinent question has been sent to this office, asking us how it is possible for The Reliable Poultry Journtl to publish in their columns a whole page of illustrations for the new Standard. Personally, we believe that it was an error to make use of the illustration on page 12 of the new Standard for advertising the book. When the association saw fit to do this, we reflected that it might end there. The presentation of page 15 in the pages of The Reliable Poultry Journal is so unique an experience that we must have time to consider the question before answering our subscribers.

Water is quite as necessary for poultry in winter as in summer. They may not use as much, but they need it to soften all the food that goes into the crop. During the winter months plenty of good, sharp grit is an absolute necessity for the health of your poultry. No fowls can do well without it. Grit is the grindstone or the teeth of the poultry with which they chew their food and reduce it to a proper consistency for assimilation. Water is the element that softens the food in the crop, as above stated, and prepares it for the ready reducing by the grit.

If your houses are damp, if the interior is unhealthy on account of dampness which can not be remedied in any other way, have a dirt floor rather than a damp floor. Dry ground or gravel floors are the best, but have the floor dry even if you must lay a deep coating of cement and lay the dirt on top of the cement to have it dry, for dry the floor must be or you can not hope to do well with your poultry.

Fatten your turkeys before you send them to market. Often there are so many turkeys sent to market for Thanksgiving week as to reduce their value. Every year for the past three turkeys for Christmas have brought a higher price than the Thanksgiving turkeys. Send to market all that are ready and in fine condition for Thanksgiving, hold the balance and make them heavy as possible for the later markets of the winter. The time to sell your turkeys and your dressed poultry is when they are ready for the market. Do not rush them for the Thanksgiving market if they will be better at a later date.

The nest-boxes should be up off the ground and out of sight of the other hens. This goes a long way toward obliterating the possibility of the fowls learning to eat their own eggs. Do not encourage this habit by teaching the hens how to get at the eggs through continually seeing them on the floor or in the nest-boxes that set upon the floor. Egg-eating is a bad habit which begins from the eating of the first egg—a frozen egg or a broken egg that is permitted to fall upon the floor. When once the habit is acquired it is very hard to get rid of it. Prevention is the best cure. When hens learn to eat their own eggs it is usually the fault of the one in charge of them.

Dry floors covered six or seven inches with dry dirt or sand which becomes dust when scratched in or turned over by the poultry is a sure sign that the floors are dry. When the dust flies in the air of the poultry house there must be a dry floor. When there is no dust and the litter lays heavy and damp on the floor, it is a sure sign of dampness. Dry dust on the floors, dry litter on the dust, plenty of small grain thrown in the litter furnishes exercise for the hen; the dust flying makes it impossible for insect vermin to exist where it is. Dry poultry houses, plenty of dust, cackling hens, plenty of eggs and a big profit, all go together.

It never pays to keep poultry that is over two years old for any purpose except for exhibition or producing eggs from which to hatch the exhibition fowls. Shut up all that is past two years old which you do not wish to keep for this purpose, fatten them quickly on rich, fattening foods and send them to market and sell them to be rid of the trouble and expense of feeding them. Old hens of the finest exhibition quality often lay eggs that are worth more than the hens themselves, but they will never lay enough to make the eggs profitable for market. Male birds past the second year are of no value whatever, except for exhibition purposes. If we would bear this in mind we might save many a bushel of corn and considerable care and trouble in looking after unprofitable stock.

When you do not care to go to the trouble of feeding rich mashes for the fatteing of poultry for market, nothing is better than new green corn. Do not give too much of this at once; begin with a little at a time mixed with old corn and wheat; increase the supply of new corn, and feed three portions of corn and one portion of wheat, all they will eat of it. One feed a day of cooked cornmeal and ground oats will help to fatten them quickly.

The growing of poultry of all kinds, and squabs as well, can be made popular and profitable in every section of the country, but it is absolutely necessary to understand this business the same as any other business if you would succeed. No one can hope to succeed in any other business if they do not understand it, neither should they expect to walk right into the poultry business with no knowledge of same and make a profit. Learn to walk before you run is a good motto. Start with a few, and grow as large as you possibly can. Do not try to start with a greater number and court failure.

Cold storage for eggs, lime preservatives and water-glass methods are being talked of. It is every one's privilege to do all they can to make money for themselves, so long as it is fairly and honestly done.

The 1905 Hagerstown Fair is a thing of the past. It was the largest and best poultry, pigeon and pet stock show ever held in the big buildings. Right glad we are to write this, for it was a fitting tribute to the memory of the late John L. Cost, the man who made Hagerstown famous in the poultry world.

Mr. Betts, superintendent of the poultry department, and J. Frank Spohr, the secretary, did much hard work to handle this immense show and both made many friends by their courteous treatment of visiting fanciers. Mr. Spohr informed us that the entries exceeded those of last year by nearly twelve hundred.

Owing to delay on the road some of the exhibits did not reach Hagerstown until late Tuesday morning. This virtually stopped judging until late in the afternoon of that day. It was Friday morning before all the birds were judged although eight judges were employed to do the work.

We believe if Hagerstown would adopt the New York and Boston method of cooping birds and closing entries at least ten days before the show, it would relieve the secretary of the department of much work, insure proper classification and a catalogue of entries. It would help the judges very much. Hagerstown is too important a show to be run on methods in vogue twenty years ago. Cock birds of each variety should be together the same as the cockerels, hens and pullets. Judging birds scattered in several aisles and mixed up quite often with other birds in the cages is not calculated to help the judge and often disappoints the exhibitor. In close competition it takes close cooping to distinguish the winning qualities of cock birds.

It is impossible to give a detailed description of the winners in the different classes at Hagerstown as many of the cards were not up on the last day of the show. A general review of some of the leading classes may prove of more than passing interest.

The Barred Rocks were not as strong as at some of the past shows, but brought out a few really fine specimens, notably first cock, a beautiful bird in color and barring and the first pen, a very even lot. White and Buff Rocks were very strong in quality, in fact above the average shown here in some time.

Wyandottes made immense classes, the Whites being larger in number to anything seen at Hagerstown in the past few years, the quality as a rule being very good. The first pullet was a gem in color, nice in shape and easily won the Ivory Soap special for whitest bird in the show. First cock, first and second hens were all high-class birds. Cockerels had a strong class of twenty-seven; winner was well-matured, white and good in shape, with the second very white but not of finished Rock development; third, best bird in class as far as style and shape goes, but has too creamy and off-color in wing-bows to get a higher place. First pen was a fine one, birds being even in color and shape, good, yellow legs and beak. Silvers were a great lot, pullets being especially fine in open lacing. Goldens were small, but fair classes. Blacks were excellent. Partridges had big classes full of quality, and even the Silver-penciled Columbians showed up strong in quality and numbers.

Asiatics showed up strong in quality, notably Light Brahmas, Buff Cochins and Langshans. The beautiful Cost Memorial Cup brought out some very handsome Light Brahmas, the veteran Nettleton, of the Nutmeg State, capturing the coveted prize with a remarkable string of birds. It was a treat to handle such fine specimens of one of the grandest breeds ever produced. Rudy's Cochins of course were "the limit."

The Mediterranean classes were filled to overflowing. Single-combed Brown Leghorns filled many coops and were simply irresistible in the females classes, many fine hens and pullets being shown. First and second cockerels were both grand birds in color, the winner of first being also fine in style and head points. Cock birds not as strong as at past shows. White Leghorns made up big classes with plenty of quality all along the line.

Buff Leghorns strong in quality and a very fine lot of Black Leghorns, as well as a few good Duckwings and Red Pyles made up a great Leghorn display.

Minorcas were exhibited in great classes. The winning hen is one of the best Minorcas we ever handled; grand in size, correct in type, beautiful in plumage, good in comb and fair in lobes, she is a star and deserved the special for best Minorca in the show. The second and third hens were so close to her that only a few points separated them, the third being off in comb, which was somewhat coarse and beefy, and in back, which was inclined somewhat to being roachy, but otherwise fully equal to winner. The winning cock and hen in White Minorcas are the best birds we ever saw of this variety. Great in size, fine in shape, pure white in plumage, with good head points, they looked invincible. Several good Black and White Rose-combed Minorcas were also on exhibition.

The Polish classes were fine and especially so in White-breasted Blacks, Mr. Minich showing a pair of the latter seldom, if ever, equaled. Hamburgs showed a falling off, the star in the crowd being the first hen, a very handsome Black, winning the special for best Hamburg in a walk.

The French and English classes were fairly well represented, especially in Orpingtons, some very fine Buffs of the latter variety being on exhibition.

There was a pretty stiff bunch of Rhode Island Reds in the building, "Uncle Daniel" Shove being there with some of his famous Red beauties. Mr. F. D. Baerman of American Red fame, was also there, so the Red cause did not want for any enthusiasm, especially with Miller Purvis on hand to help Messrs. Shove and Baerman out in case of a lack of interest in the Red alley.

Bantams had big entries and the Hon. David A. Nichols had to stay over a day longer to judge the Ornamental varieties. He did it to the satisfaction of nearly all the exhibitors. It was a hard job, but the Senator is at home on Ornamental Bantams. "Bill" Minich's White Cochin hen won the special for the best Ornamental Bantam and well deserved it. She was a dream of whiteness and a harmony of parts as far as shape, symmetry and leg feathering was concerned.

Owing to the serious illness of Mr. A. A. Parker, the Game and Game Bantam judge selected, Messrs. Drevenstedt and Stanton were assigned to do the judging stunts in this strenuous alley. They both escaped without material injury, and while several kind friends of theirs handed out a number of left-handed bouquets, the atmosphere was not badly jarred. The classes in Game Bantams were very warm and in Black-reds especially. Many an old winner was in line. First Black-breasted Red Bantam Game cock and first pullet same class, were really fine specimens, as good as the best, with plenty of others close up. The whole Game Bantam classes, with the exception of the Blacks, were exceedingly fine. The Indian Game Bantams were the finest we ever handled, the first cock being a perfect model; short in leg, strong in thigh, legs well spread, deep and broad in breast, fine in head, back and tail, he made a picture such as a lover of Indian Games enjoys. This reminds us that the big Indian Games were small classes, but brought out some grand birds, notably first cock. Exhibition Games were small classes but plenty of quality in the bunch.

Mr. Justin Frederick Crangle, who judged the water-fowls, said it was the greatest and largest collection he ever handled and what "Freddy" says on this subject usually is the absolute, unvarnished truth. Personally we have never seen a nicer display of water-fowls than at Hagerstown this year.

About forty chicken fanciers of northeastern Pennsylvania met and perfected a Fanciers Poultry Association at Scranton, Pa., on October 3, for the purpose of holding a modern and up-to-date show next January. Spratts are to coop, feed and superintend the exhibition. Efforts will be made to make this the leading show in the Keystone State. First and second cash prizes will be offered in addition to five ribbons given at the meeting mentioned above. Without any effort

W. S. RUSSELL

A SELF-MADE man, a self-made expert on poultry is W. S. Russell, of Ottumwa, Iowa. Few have accomplished as much or can rival his standing as an accepted authority on score-card judging throughout the entire western country. It was he, in company with E. B. Thompson, of Amenia, New York, who passed judgment so satisfactorily upon the Barred Rocks at the Pan-American poultry display.

shares at $5 placed in the hands of Mr. Magargee, treasurer, the sum of five hundred dollars. This was a fine beginning. This new society can and will defray all expenses, besides guaranteeing the payment of all cash prizes. The ribbons offered will be original and beautiful in design. A large number of cash specials and silver cups will also be offered. Judges will be selected at the next regular meeting. With such a good financier and business man as J. W. Schiebel, Jr., in charge of the secretaryship, success is assured from the start. The attendance at this show should be large, there being many fanciers located in and near Scranton, Pa., with Wilkes-Barre only a few miles away.

Thomas Parker and son and Joseph Shull, of Johnstown, N. Y., returned home after two months of showing around the circuit. Both Messrs. Parker and Shull had great success in winning the bulk of the prizes at the fairs. The birds sent out by the above exhibitors are strictly first-class and could hold their own at the best of winter shows.

The Poughkeepsie Fair was the most successful, financially, ever held in the old burg. Superintendent Van Wyck informs us that every bird got home to its rightful owner and there was not a hitch in the management of the poultry department. An even more liberal classification is promised for 1906.

The premium list of the Great Eastern Poultry Show is out and in the hands of thousands of fanciers. The exhibition to be held under the auspices of the same club that held the Herald Square Show last year, will take place at the Grand Central Palace November 13 to 17, the same week as the Horse Show. The hall is well located, adjoining the Grand Central Depot. It was impossible to secure Macys Hall, but the new one is well adapted for holding a poultry, pigeon and pet stock show. The entry fee has been raised from one to two dollars, and the premiums offered are as follows: First, $5; second, $2. The entry fee for exhibition yards is $5. The entry fee for pigeons is $1 per bird.

An innovation in the poultry and pigeon show line is the arrangement regarding the judges selected. It reads as follows: "Only after entries have closed the names of judges will be made public and will be found in the catalogue. Exhibitors may rest assured that competent judges will be engaged." A number of fanciers who read this announcement were rather disappointed and some expressed themselves freely regarding this rule. They feel that a judge's name should appear in cold type in the premium list so they can rest assured that the trade-mark of ability is somewhere to be found among the feathered adjudicators. Personally we have always been of the opinion that not only should the judges names be printed, but the classes they are to judge, as well. In justice to Dr. Paul Kyle, president of the Great Eastern Poultry Show, we will state that he has reasons for the stand he takes on this matter. Last year he received a number of letters blackmailing some of the judges he had selected, and he thought it best to start a new method and save some of the interested and selfish exhibitors the trouble of selecting the judges they would like to have. Furthermore we can state that Dr. Kyle corresponded with a well-known judge, offering him the opportunity to select all the best judges for the different classes available. The intention of the doctor is perfectly sincere and laudable but it remains to be seen whether the new rule will be accepted with good grace by the rank and file of the fancy.

Entries for the Great Eastern Poultry Show at New York close October 28. Copies of the premium list can be secured from Mr. C. E. Gauss, secretary, Flushing, N. Y.

T. E. Orr, George M. Holden and George Burgott are going to the Pacific Coast to judge the California State Show to be held at San Francisco next winter.

The show to be held at Charleston, S. C., in November, promises to be one of the finest ever held in the South. A splendid lot of fanciers are back of this event and it is bound to be a success.

The illustration on our title-page, October 7 issue, is a pretty good piece of work by the young artist Mr. E. B. Fox, of New York. It shows up the Lakenvelder type as good as anything we have ever seen in this line. If Mr. Fox will avoid the fault of nearly all poultry delineators, viz., too much background and unnecessary scenery and give us the birds proper, he will hit the nail on the head. He has every indication of becoming a fine delineator of poultry and we shall watch his work with more than passing interest in the future.

cising was done in other states. He then related a good-humored German anecdote.

Dr. Lea then briefly responded "The Sunny South," telling how greatly he appreciated the kindness and courtesy extended him on his first trip as a judge in the North. C. L. Blanton briefly responded to "Old Virginia." Mr. W. C. Denney, "The Wooden Hen," showed how the demand for incubators is rapidly increasing.

Mr. McGrew then paid a deserved tribute to Senator Betts, the superintendent. He said that no man was ever displaced from the glories of state by the will of God or otherwise but that a suitable and acceptable successor was found. He said the royal welcome they had all received and the wonderful hospitality not only made them desirous of coming another season to Hagerstown, but if the association would provide tents they would all come with their families and stay a month.

Mr. Miller Purvis, "John L. Cost," which is given herewith in full, closed the banquet.

JOHN L. COST

"I think all of us who have foregathered here from year to year have the same feeling to-night. To himself each one of us is saying:

"'Oh, for the touch of a vanished hand,
The sound of a voice that is still.'

"The clasp of a hand, the warm touch of which ever made us feel the strong bond of brotherhood which existed between us and the one whose place to-night is occupied by a vacant chair, the sound of a voice which always spoke words of welcome, good cheer and the joy of living.

"He was one of those to whom we refer as the Old Guard. One of those who laid the foundation upon which was built the splendid industry which brings us here. We speak of them almost with reverence. One by one, time, which is relentless, brings them to the parting of the ways. One by one they pass the gate of the Great Mystery and come back to us no more. For them the hands on the great dial of time stand still and after life's fitful fever dram they rest well.

"I stand here to-night, feeling that it is a great honor to have been chosen to speak in praise of him for whom we morn. Without sacrificing his principles he died the friend of the whole world, because he was first generous and then just.

"The life of a man is not valuable because of what he may have done in the way of winning fame or piling up wealth. The effect of the life of any man must be measured by the memories he leaves behind him, the currents he sets in motion and their effect on those with whom they come in contact. Judged by this criterion our dead friend lived a well-rounded life. To him came gospel measure of success, heaped up, pressed down, and running over.

"In every walk of life he did his whole duty, and did it well. As soldier or civilian, as a private man of business or a public servant, whatever his hand was set to do he did thoroughly and in a way to command respect and admiration.

"He was one of God's own noblemen. Earnest, sincere, unostentatious, loyal to his friends and direct in his methods, he was, in the highest and best sense of the word, a man. A man of sorrows his voice was never lifted to bewail his condition or misfortunes. Death had treated him cruelly by taking away from him those whom he loved with a depth of feeling and a tenderness which few of us suspected. He seemed to feel that yonder were the Hilltops of Hope whose heights he might sometime win.

"I think I may say without boasting that I was one among his closest friends. He talked to me freely about his own interests and those in which we were mutually interested. In all the years I knew him I never heard him utter a single solitary word that even hinted at malice or ill will.

"When my time comes "'To wrap about me the draperies of my couch

And lie down to pleasant dreams,'

I ask no grander monument than that I may leave behind me as many pleasant memories as many sorrowing friends as were left behind John L. Cost when peacefully he fell asleep.

"May his memory remain green as long as the blue hills of the Maryland be loved so well lift their tops heavenward, as long as the stars swing in their courses, as long as the waters of the rivers seek the sea."

We regret very much to be compelled to state that up to the time of going to press we have not received the list of awards of the Hagerstown Show. We have delayed the issue of the paper in the hope of receiving the awards in time for publication. We presume the unusually large entry there prevented the finishing up of the list and forwarding to us in time for this issue.

BROWN'S BUDGET

It was all Hagerstown last week.

Every one was there and had some one else with him, and the poultry house was the center of attraction.

It looked odd to see Secretary Crawford, of New York, an interested visitor, inspecting birds along the aisles. He greatly admired some of the winners, and Mr. Crawford is familiar with "good ones" too—and knows what a good specimen is of any variety.

The hottest place in the show was Brown Leghorn alley, and Brown Leghorn was discussed there until it is said some of the fanciers said they had a dark brown taste in their mouths. Some were accused of being frenzied fanciers.

Bantam alley gave the judges "such a headache, yet." Whew! what stunners, and by the score, too. Don't mean score card but numbers.

White Wyandottes—like an extended snow drift. Quality—well, I guess so. When the awards were placed there were "others" still left that deserved honors. The female that won the Ivory Soap cup special was the purest possible white, a real white daisy.

The Barred Rock cock exhibited by Eugene Sites, of Ohio, which won first prize, was the best Barred Rock male that has been shown at Hagerstown for years. He had barring, true color, shape and style.

Ex-President McClave had a case of "something doing" when he struck the Silver-laced Wyandottes. He tightened his belt and put on that serious business expression; then he soon picked the winners.

We all missed friend Zimmer. There seemed to be a great lack of general enjoyment among the judges. The enthusiasm and good fellowship feeling was also quite conspicuous for its absence. There was in the heart of every judge a gloom, an atmosphere of sorrow, for all missed more than tongue can tell the lamented John L. Cost.

There were many "first-time" visitors, and they all declared they would come again.

Ten life and twenty annual members joined the A. P. A. at Hagerstown meeting. Among the life memberships was the Cincinnati Poultry Association.

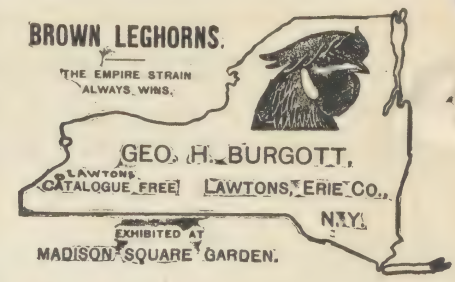
Notes



The most successful lofts are those cared for entirely by the owner who is a true fancier. Hired attendants who are indifferent do not succeed well with them.

Clean up the poultry houses, apply the whitewash and the insect powder, if you would be free of lice and have good sanitary conditions.

Nothing is so good to prevent the presence of lice on the poultry as to clean up the houses and paint every crack and crevice and roost with some liquid lice killer.

Apply the lice killer to the roosts an hour or two before the hens retire for the night. While they set upon the roost the lice killer does the work.

Do not waste the straw, the hulls and the refuse from the peas and beans when you thresh them this season; the poultry will enjoy them so much to dig in next winter. Keep them dry for that purpose.

Squabs are raised in one month, bring big prices. Money makers for poultrymen, farmers, women. Send for our FREE BOOK and learn this immensely rich industry. 83

Another New Addition to the Prairie State Line

THE PRAIRIE STATE Jr. A Low Priced Good Incubator

In August we called your attention to the New Prairie State Colony House Brooder; in September we created a sensation with our New Universal Hover—they were both "winners." This month we are presenting our pet, THE PRAIRIE STATE JR. INCUBATOR. We call it our pet because it is the perfected result of years of expert experimenting to produce a machine which we can stand right square back of and yet sell at a low price—one in fact worthy the name PRAIRIE STATE. The JUNIOR is the outgrowth of a constant demand on us for a cheaper machine. It is built to help the beginner get into a profitable business for very little money, and is so constructed that it hatches good broods in the hands of the most inexperienced, while it meets every demand of the exacting expert. It has improvements no other low price incubator ever had. For boys and girls it will prove a money-maker—will not disappoint them. Write for our new Jr. catalog; also ask for the new Brooder catalog. They are both FREE and chock full of new and novel ideas.

Here is a bone cutter entirely different from any other on the market—every point of difference is an improvement. It feeds the bone endwise to the cutting knives automatically, thereby producing a much finer, better chipping than is possible in any other machine. Every poultryman knows the advantage of feeding fowls cut green bone. We want them to know how easy it is to prepare it. You can get the green bone fresh every day from your butcher at a trifling cost—it's no bother and very little work to prepare it with the STANDARD BONE CUTTER. Fed regularly green bone will double your egg supply, make eggs that will hatch strong, vigorous chicks, and keep your whole flock healthy and profitable. The money you spend for a bone cutter will return a profit to you every day. Machines are made in several sizes to suit large or small poultry raisers. A NATIONAL MAGAZINE DEVOTED TO POULTRY, PIGEONS AND PET STOCK

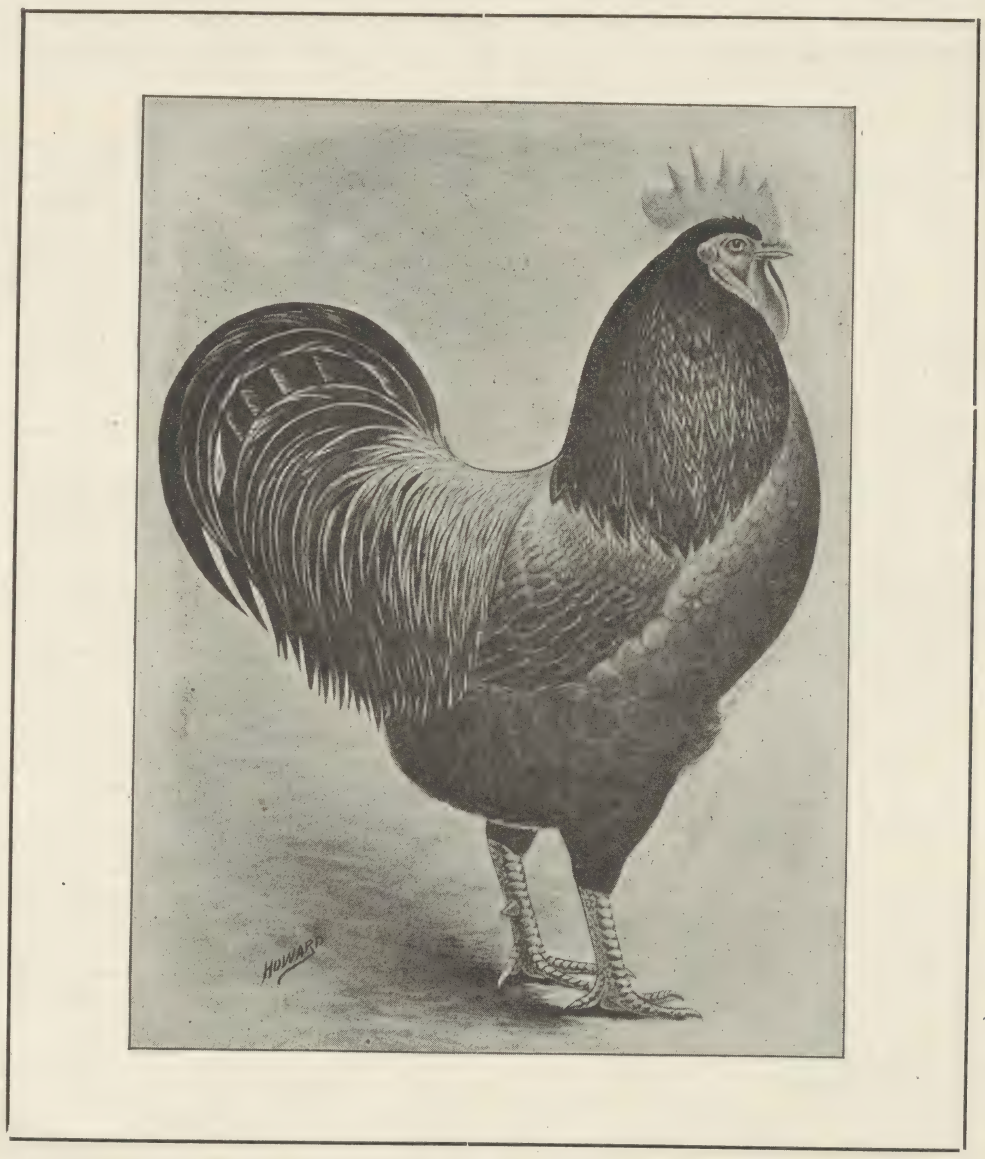
Volume XXIV — Washington, D. C., November 4, 1905 — No. 627

THE BLACK JAVA

The Java fowls have been known in the eastern part of the United States as good market poultry almost from the beginning of farming in this country. But we are told that the Black Java of early days was quite a different style and type of fowl from the Black Java of the present. While we have no inclination to dispute with those more familiar with this breed than ourselves, we are rather inclined to the opinion that the Black Java of to-day is simply an improvement of the Black Java of earlier time.



There is scarcely as much difference in the Black Java of to-day as compared with the Black Java of one hundred years ago, as there is between the Barred Plymouth Rock of to-day, and one of twenty-five or thirty years previous. When it is possible to make so much improvement as has been done in all the Plymouth Rock and Wyandotte family, why should we be surprised at the change of the present-day Java over and above the type which preceded it by fifty years. Then again we have the Mottled Java, and we have heard it stated that some of the sports from both the black and the mottled are pure white. This might be and it would not be unnatural for the White Java to sport from the Black Java or for the Mottled Java to come as the result of matings that had produced the white sports.

But this is not what we had in mind when we started to write of the Java fowl. Our intention was to call public notice to the fact that less than twenty years ago, the illustrations and the writings about the Java were almost as frequent as are the writings of the Plymouth Rocks and the Wyandottes of to-day. The Javas were brought into public prominence by the care and industry of those who favor them in calling the attention of the public to them through illustrations and writings. Just as soon as this was neglected the breed began to dwindle and fall back in public favor. Does any one imagine the Javas are any less a valuable fowl to-day than formerly? Can any one prove that they have not advanced and become better, more valuable and better calculated to become popular, profitable poultry? We scarcely think that this can be done.

On the other hand we are glad to state that at Lenox, Mass., that long-time fancier, George M. Weed, had on exhibition some Mottled Javas superior to any Mottled Javas or in fact Javas of any kind, that we have ever seen. If it were possible for this fancier and others to carry out and improve this type of Java, it would be but a short time until the Mottled Java would come back again into public favor; for these are more beautiful than any Anconas or Houdans that we have ever seen in the rich color of the plumage and the mottling.

What has been done can be done again, and it would be possible for those interested in Javas to take hold of them and breed them better and better, thus pushing them back into public favor again. One man in Connecticut has been known a long time as Jones the Java man. Mr. Jones through his persistence in having the best Javas possible to obtain and by carefully caring for and breeding them has been able to keep his name before the public. Whenever the name is heard in poultry circles, it is understood to mean the Java fowl.

We do not wish to be understood that all the Joneses in the world are in the Java business, but we do wish to compliment this one individual Jones for his determination to keep the quality and the name of the Java fowl before the public. If our friend Weed will join in with him and work along the lines that have produced the beautiful specimens he had at Lenox, we shall hope to see in the near future a line of Javas shown worthy of the breed.

BLACK JAVA

"Between the chigger and the nigger," writes a Florida breeder, "our poultry has a time to exist. If he escapes the former while young, when a little older is apt to be gathered by the latter, and there you are, or rather, you ain't." Every section has its troubles in poultry raising. Try fine mosquito netting on the openings of the hen-house, doors and windows, for the chigoe trouble, and a bulldog and fine shot for the dark of the moon trouble.

Leghorns at Hagerstown

The Hagerstown Fair Association has much to be proud of in their poultry display. In number of exhibits and quality it is conceded that this show outclassed the last Madison Square Garden Show. Entries in the Leghorn class were particularly large, quality being of the finest.

Single-combed Brown Leghorns had ninety-two singles and two pens entered, in all nine cocks, thirty hens, thirteen cockerels and forty pullets, which was almost double of that for Madison Square. Certainly a finer display of Single-combed Brown Leghorns of high class, even color and typical style was never exhibited than was entered in competition at this show. It looked as though the old birds had heard of the new Standard, and had bred to meet its requirements.

In the Single-combed White Leghorn class eighty-six singles and five pens were entered. This class was made up of eighteen cocks, twenty-two hens, twenty-two cockerels and twenty-four pullets. Pure white in color, medium-sized combs, good tail carriage, fine legs and good size made them particularly attractive.

Rose-combed Brown Leghorns had thirty-one single entries, which were six cocks, eight hens, eight cockerels and nine pullets. This variety is fast gaining the plumage and size of the Single-combed Browns. In color and penciling quite an improvement is noticed.

Rose-combed White Leghorns had twenty-four single entries of three cocks, six hens, eight cockerels and seven pullets. While this variety was not as large as some of the others, the quality was pronounced.

Single-comb Buff Leghorns had thirty-five single entries, consisting of seven cocks, eight hens, ten cockerels and ten pullets. Strong in color and good head points were the marked features in this variety.

Rose-combed Buff Leghorns had ten single entries of three cocks, three hens, two cockerels and two pullets. Like the Single-comb Buff they were strong in color and good style.

Silver Duckwing Leghorns made us a class of eighteen single entries of four cocks, four hens, four cockerels and six pullets.

Single-combed Black Leghorns showed up with twenty-six single entries of four cocks, six hens, eight cockerels and eight pullets. A very strong and striking lot of birds, with fine head points and good plumage.

Red Pyle Leghorns had an entry of three cockerels and three pullets. The quality of all of them was good. Dominique Leghorns only had an entry of one cock and two hens, but these were large and of good feather.—Washington Waters.

Strong, Fertile Eggs

The most important problem is that of securing fertile eggs; in fact, they are the one thing absolutely required. The percentage hatched will depend upon the fertility and vitality of the eggs placed in the incubator or under hens, and the fertility of the eggs will depend chiefly upon the vigor of the parent stock. The conditions necessary to the fertilization of eggs are simply those which will secure good health to the parent stock from which the eggs are secured.

There are a number of conditions which will determine the health and vigor of the parent stock, and the percentage of eggs that will hatch. Free range for laying stock will conduce health and vigor, as it develops a strong muscular system. Eggs from such stock will hatch exceptionaly well and will hatch strong, healthy and vigorous chicks. The percentage of such eggs hatched will often run as high as ninety.

In order to secure the best conditions of laying stock, wholesome food and good, clean houses are absolutely essential. Every poultryman understands this perfectly. No matter how good the incubator is, the results will be disappointing if the houses are reeking with filth, or if the fowls are improperly fed. Eggs also, as is well known, become lower in vitality with age and after a time become worthless for hatching purposes. Eggs will often hatch after they are a month old, but not only will fewer eggs hatch, but the chicks will be less vigorous and many of them be utterly worthless. Such weak chicks are often attributed to the failure of the incubator, but there could not be a greater injustice.—E. G. Wyckoff.

Editorial Gossip

Hagerstown has passed into history for this year. So far but very few complaints of any wrong shipments have been reported to us. There is one, however, that we would like to call to the attention of every fancier who exhibited Bantams at Hagerstown, and that is that the little Buff Cochin Bantam hen belonging to the daughter of Mr. Joseph P. Hilldorfer, of Allegheny, Pa., has not been returned to him from the Hagerstown Show. We trust that every bantam fancier and every exhibitor at the Hagerstown Fair will make it his purpose to try and return this hen to the little lady who mourns her loss so severely.

One of the oldest fanciers in the state of Ohio was Mr. Joe Farmer. Years ago he earned the well-deserved title of "Honest Joe Farmer," and if there ever was a truly honest fancier it was he. We regret very much to be called upon to announce his death on the 2d of October last. He leaves behind him a wife and seven children and thousands of friends in the Buckeye State.

Mr. Homer W. Jackson, of Ohio, tells the readers of The Stockman and Farmer that they should be very careful in the selecting of the hens to send to market. If you have more pullets than will fill your houses you can get along without the hens, but often the hens that do not lay so many eggs during the winter months are the most prolific and most valuable egg producers early in the spring. This is a question well worth the attention of all, but to be able to decide this proposition as it should be, one must now the hens that lay the eggs during the first winter. These are the ones that are valuable to retain.

We have a letter from Mr. A. C. Wheeler, Silvernails, New York, which states that he won first on White Wyandotte pullet, and the national White Wyandotte special for best pullet at the Poughkeepsie Fair, claiming that in the report of the awards he did not have proper credit. Of course we are not responsible for these errors as we publish the reports as they come to us.

Mr. H. V. Crawford, Montclair, N. J., secretary of the New York Madison Square Garden Show, is very anxious to have all material for his catalogue in hand ready for publication as soon as possible. Specialty clubs will please report to him and every item of interest that should go into the catalogue should be sent to him at once, so that there will be no reason for a misunderstanding if they are not published in the regular issue of the catalogue. New York Show promises to be larger and better than ever before.

We have just issued from this office a beautiful little catalogue describing all our publications, and offering a list of special prizes as premiums to all interested in sending in subscriptions. We invite all our readers who may feel willing to assist us in extending the circulation of our papers into every niche and corner of the country, to write us for one of these beautiful little catalogues which contain something of interest to every poultryman in the United States. Our list of poultry publications has widened to such an extent that there is something among them that will be of interest to every poultry and pigeon fancier in the country.

Within the next few weeks the question of winter egg production from your pullets must be decided. If the pullets are brought to the strength and vigor of an early winter egg production, they are likely to continue in the same condition through the entire winter. If, however, the important features of finishing for the labor has been neglected, more than likely there will be but few eggs produced by them until after the winter has changed into spring.

Now is the time to select your breeders for next season, Choose from all you know or all you have the ones best suited to your purpose, and unless a fancier for exhibition, keep the one variety, and keep it pure and true. Give them all the range possible and care for them for profitable returns along the line of market poultry and eggs.

Nothing is truer than the recent statement in one of the current journals that poultry premises should be protected from raw winter influences. This is true in every particular. The poultry must be protected from the injurious influences of cold and frost. Their quarters must be reasonably dry and comfortable for poultry. Cleanliness to the extent of comfort for poultry must be observed. Where break of some kind or character is most beneficial and profitable. Take care of the poultry as poultry, and as poultry should be cared for, and you will succeed with them. Fine particles of broken charcoal—what is called animal charcoal is the best—clover meal and oyster shell are all necessary to the comfort and welfare of the poultry, but it should be kept in boxes constructed for that purpose, and the poultry allowed to help themselves. Never mix any of these in with the mash food for the poultry and compel them to eat it whether or not. Permit them to be the judge of the quantity they will eat and to select the time for consumption.

The indications are that fresh-laid eggs and all kinds of market poultry will sell for high prices the coming winter. Poultrymen and the entire agricultural interest throughout the country have been blessed beyond measure for the last few years. Plenty and comfort abounds on all sides. This should teach the lesson of care and economy. Make the best possible use of the season of prosperity to guard and prepare against the possibilities of a reaction or hard times.

What is known as a feast or a famine should be avoided in the care of poultry, as, for instance, one day a basketful of green food, the week following none, then another deluge of green food. This makes trouble among the poultry. The same can be said of all kinds of food. A feast today and a famine to-morrow assures failure. Regularity and judgment are the essentials for success.

Almost every poultry journal you pick up, and agricultural paper as well, continually states that sweet milk is an ideal food for the hens. Give them all they will drink of it, they say. On the other hand, scientific experts tell us that there is no advantage whatever gained from the feeding of milk as a drink to poultry. All admit with common consent that if the milk is thoroughly cooked and used for mixing or moistening mash foods, it is of great benefit far beyond any other material that can be used for that purpose. This is a statement that should have the consideration of all interested in the growing of poultry. Personally, we would rather deprive our fowls entirely of any milk whatever than to make use of it for a drink, for the reason that in summer time it sours and smears the fowls and the ground upon which it may be spilled and creates the most perfect breeding place for gape worms. In winter it freezes quickly and the fowls eat the ice from same, which is nothing more than frozen water, gaining no benefit therefrom, but considerable injury. It will more than pay to thoroughly boil the milk and mix it in the mash food. When not used in this way better put it in the slop for the hogs.

Make every arrangement for the coming winter. Have your houses arranged so as to comfortably contain the fowls in confinement during all the bad weather of winter. They will do much better shut up inside the poultry-houses if there is room enough and the floors are dry and thoroughly well-covered with dry straw for litter.

Skimmed milk is splendid for chickens, old and young, but you had better boil it and mix it in the mash. Poultry do not like a slop.

Friend Wittman is always presenting something new as he sees it. He is now determined to start a fresh-air fund for the poultry of the country, and as a side-dish, he states as follows: "I doubt if any of these chicken men so loudly heralding the hopper method would like to see their children raised, with free access at all times to food, and particularly with one of the foods so strongly doped as is the beef scrap." Now, friend Wittman, I could show you a few well-grown men that were very well raised on the hopper method; but if you will simply go into your own household you will see that those strong, healthy children of your own who have free access to growing fruit and well-filled sideboard, and an indulgent mother, who, while not running exactly a variety feed hopper plan, never denies the growing child something good to eat whenever it says it is hungry. We often overlook things at our own door, and step beyond to examine imaginary conditions. The best poultry that I have ever known or grown in my life were hopper fed from the days they were hatched until placed in the show pen.

Publishing Show Dates

Publishing the list of show dates is a very expensive as well as an annoying proposition. There are a few rules followed by some that should be strictly observed by all; that is, always write on one side of the sheet of paper; carefully divide the classes into sections or paragraphs; when a typewriter is not used, be very careful in writing the names so that the typesetter may not get them wrong. After these necessary requirements have been observed send the manuscript as quickly as possible for publication. Whenever manuscript is so delayed as to become two weeks old it is utterly useless as a news proposition for this paper. Those who write show reports or facts of interest from any fall fair exhibition or winter show should mail them promptly so that they will reach us, if possible, before the show has closed. Manuscript of this kind that is two weeks old seldom, if ever, meets with much consideration. It is news, bright and new, that we are anxious to have and publish in the columns of our papers.

714 12th St. N. W., Washington, D. C.

The Scranton (Pa.) dates have been selected and are January 15 to 20, same week as Boston Show.

The Newark (N. J.) and Schnectady (N. Y.) shows will be held again on the same dates as last year, viz., January 29 to February 3, 1906.

The show to be held at Walden, N. Y., December 5 to 9, has been called off owing to the fact that a suitable hall can not be procured this season.

We are informed that the once famous Orange County Fair will move back to its old home in Newburg, N. Y., next season and that the poultry department will be conducted on the open-to-the-world basis. This means a big chicken show and no mistake.

We are reliably informed that the managers of the rival Chicago Shows have come together and are at work trying to harmonize matters all along the line and work for one big show instead of two, as in the past two years. Mr. E. J. W. Dietz writes us as follows regarding the above:

"Thinking you might be interested in the poultry situation at Chicago, I thought I would take the trouble to give you the following items: You, undoubtedly, are aware that a couple of years ago there was some discussion in the poultry fraternity here. This resulted in two separate poultry shows being held in Chicago during the past season. It is a well-known fact that these shows have been unsuccessful from a monetary standpoint. It seems to be easy enough to get together two exhibitions of poultry, but it is impossible to secure the attendance to meet the expenses necessitated by holding two such shows.

"A few months ago a pigeon fancier wrote to one of the pigeon papers suggesting that each association appoint a committee to meet and see if it could not be arranged to hold a joint show. These committees have met jointly twice and a plan is under way which indicates that both associations will hold a joint show the last week in January on the dates."

Mr. Will Purdy, of Sherman, Tex., writes: "A vote of the members of the Northern Texas Poultry Association was taken in regard to the method of judging to be used at the show to be held at Dallas, January, 1906, and the majority was in favor of comparison. So your forecast was correct." We trust that this bit of news will please Editor McReynolds and satisfy him that we were not very far out of the way when we "guessed" that comparison judging would be used at the show noted above.

Mr. E. S. Evans, secretary of the Springfield (Mass.) Poultry and Pet Stock Association informs us that show matters are booming in Springfield and all indications point to a great quantity and high quality. He further states that the association has secured the best-lighted hall in New England and can take care of more birds than ever before.

Poultry raisers having hens that persist in laying eggs on Sundays will be more or less interested in the following piece of news found in The New York Sun:

"Harrodsburg, Ky., October 21.—The good women of Bethel Presbytery have decided to give to missions hereafter all eggs laid by their hens on Sundays. At a meeting of their missionary society the presiding officer read her report showing that during the year the society had given $23,000 for missions.

"The announcement set the meeting aflame, and members suggested that they strive to still greater things.

"Ways and means were called for and out came the 'egg' suggestion. At first it was unanimously popular, but after the first flush several who have dozens of prosperous but sacrilegious hens objected.

"They thought this would be a discrimination. They argued long and loud, but the original motion prevailed and the Sunday eggs will hereafter be turned over to the mission fund."

On our way back from the Southland we stopped off in New York long enough to visit the Hon. William V. Russ, proprietor of the Excelsior Poultry and Supply Company. Dr. L. S. Bache, of Star Incubator fame, was also present and the consequence was a three-cornered chicken talk resulted. Business has been kind and good to both these gentlemen the past season. Mr. Russ just closed a deal for forty-two 228-duck incubators against all competitors. He reports the sale of Banner Chick Food being larger than the capacity of the mill and that arrangements are being made to double the capacity so as to produce over one thousand tons yearly. Over fifteen hundred of Russ $5 prize brooders were sold last season and in most cases were accompanied by the new Empire State Incubator. Last year's sales of this large concern were the greatest in its history and indicate forcibly the character of the goods handled and the wonderful increase in the demand for artificial appliances for hatching and rearing chickens. The results obtained by Mr. Russ were in the face of much competition from other well-known and first-class concerns, who all did a goodly share of business in little old New York. The poultry business is certainly on the jump in and around the metropolis.

Mr. B. W. Mosher, of Johnstown, N. Y., has been secured as superintendent of the Great Eastern Poultry Show to be held at Grand Central Palace, New York City, November 13 to 17. Mr. Mosher has acted in the same capacity at former Johnstown shows and is fully qualified to handle such an important show as the one to be held in New York. He has had the experience and has the system down fine when it comes to handling exhibits. He will take two experienced helpers along.

The list of silver cups, cash specials and merchandise offered as premiums at Kentucky's great show to be held at Frankfort is a very large one and should bring out a rousing entry.

One of the handsomest silver cups ever designed was the John L. Cost Memorial Cup. The design was original with the Derby Silver Company, of Derby, Conn., and is the first of a new series to be placed on the market. The original cost of the cup was $100.

This reminds us of the Ivory Soap silver cup won by Mr. John K. Ottley at the Atlanta Show two weeks ago, which was another original and handsome creation in silver. It went to a very handsome White Plymouth Rock hen, a famous winner in the past few years at leading shows in the South. But Mr. Ottley has plenty of other fine White Rocks. The latter variety is very popular in Dixie Land and deservedly so.

The demand for silkies is far larger than the supply. It will pay some breeders to start in and breed a large number of real good ones, the kind that ought to win and not some of the red-faced and combed roosters that too often capture a prize because of little or no competition. The real Silky with mulberry comb and face and true silky plumage is a very attractive bird.

We were glad to meet Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Rigg at Hagerstown, Md. Mr. Rigg is doing fine work as associate editor of The American Poultry Journal. He expects to be at the Madison Square Garden Show in January and expects to meet many of his eastern friends there. We hope he will stir up the Houdan fanciers to come out in force at New York.

Polish fanciers of the United States and Canada would greatly appreciate a liberal classification and some special inducements in the shape of cash prizes or cups at the Madison Square (New York) Show next January. We would like to see a rousing show of Polish there, one that will go down in history as the greatest ever seen. There is still time to get the good work started. "Billy" Card, of Bristol, Conn., and "Billy" McNeil, of London, Canada, are two "Willies" that can help the cause by their individual efforts in the direction of getting specials and making arrangements with the management of the New York Show. Polish, as a rule, attract more attention than any other variety at a New York show.

The poultry show at Portland, Oregon, held in connection with the Lewis and Clark Exposition, was a distinct disappointment to all connected with it. The hard work of Collier, Dixon and others went for naught. Theodore Hewes, in The Inland Poultry Journal, sizes up the situation as follows:

Gallery of Fame

J. Y. BICKNELL

WE CAN not refrain from congratulating our artist on the superb likeness of the early-day secretary of the American Poultry Association, Mr. J. Y. Bicknell, of Buffalo, N. Y., a true fancier, an expert poultry judge and an all-round good fellow. Mr. Bicknell belongs in the class of early-day poultrymen. Those who won in the circuit twenty-five years ago will remember him, and those who exhibit to-day are always glad to welcome him with open arms.

"Evidently the managers of the Lewis and Clark Fair did not consider the live stock exhibits of any great importance and accorded them space that might have answered in olden times for an Indian village or a bull fight—in fact, they acted as though they were afraid some one might see them and in addition to shoving them off a mile or more from the entrance they put them back of an old railroad dump so that visitors might use the capstan balloon in order to locate the sheds.

"The live-stock men have stood for several slaps in the face by exposition managers, but Portland rubbed it in to show them that they could. It's too late to remedy the evil, but we can at least pay our respects to the management that they may know we found the show.

"Our readers are only interested in poultry and to that department we will confine ourselves. Our western breeders want to know how their show compared with the East and our eastern and middle-state breeders are interested along the same lines, and I give here my unbiased opinion of the several classes as compared with our best fall shows.

"In Barred and White Rocks, Buff Orpingtons, Rhode Island Reds, Silver and White Wyandottes, Buff and White Leghorns, Brown Leghorn males and Black and White Minorcas, it is doubtful if we have ever had a better quality show, time of year considered, in any of our Middle States than I found at Portland. Andalusians were another strong class, surpassed only by Minneapolis last winter. In the Asiatic varieties, with the exception of a few individual specimens, the exhibit was not up to the quality found farther east. Hamburgs were good but only a small class. The same can be said of Polish. Other breeds and varieties about as we would find them in our average fall fairs.

"There is a spirit of sportsmanship among the western breeders that is seldom met with in other sections of the country. Win or lose they are the same good fellows, while a winning at Portland meant a great deal to some of the exhibitors. I heard less faultfinding with awards at Portland than any national show I have ever attended—in fact, there was not a serious kick or complaint registered over any award."

What became of that carload of Indiana birds Theodore? You know that there was something said about that in your excellent paper.

The East was represented by one exhibitor, the veteran C. P. Nettleton, Shelton, Conn. He sent one hen, one cockerel and one pullet, Light Brahmas, winning first cockerel and hen and third pullet. These birds were sold at a good price to Mrs. Chandler, of Tacoma, Wash. As Mr. Nettleton won the fine Cost Memorial Cup almost the same time at Hagerstown, he was strictly "in it" in Light Brahmas this fall. His birds "are the goods."

Editor Hewes, who was at Portland, has the following note regarding the non-appearance of Mr. Hallock at the show held there:

"Mr. Hallock, of St. Louis, who was employed as one of the judges, advised the superintendent that owing to another important meeting he could not report until the 7th. Mr. Dixon promptly wired him to stay at home. We don't know what this important meeting was to which Mr. Hallock referred, but we do know that young judges can ill afford to consider any matter of more importance than promptness at a national show. It will be remembered that Rochester, N. Y., was turned down by Mr. Hallock on some slight pretense."

Mr. Hallock, who is secretary of the National White Wyandotte Club, failed to put in an appearance at Rochester, N. Y., in time for the judging owing to an injury to his eye, and another judge was assigned to his classes. He was, however, able later on to assist in placing the club specials. Mr. Hallock has been engaged to judge White Wyandottes at the Madison Square Garden, New York, and we believe he will appear in the arena with his duster.

There has been a big howl all along the line, especially from exhibitors having first-class stock, over the poor judging done at many fairs this season. Most of the complaints are traceable to county fairs held in the Empire State, and many of the complaints are well-founded. At one fair no judge was in sight on the day of opening and after telegraphing and telegraphing, none could be secured, so some exhibitors were put to work judging. Yet the state of New York pays the greater share of cash premiums on live stock and other agricultural exhibits. At another fair a man was employed because he was cheap, and yet this judge(?) had only bred one variety of fowl. The result can be imagined. Yet the state of New York pays most of the prize money. At another show where entry fees of twenty-five to fifty cents are charged and the state furnishes a goodly share of the prize money, judges were asked to officiate at a sum too ridiculous to mention here. We shall have a separate article on this subject later, after all the facts are in, and incidentally throw the limelight on some methods that have disgraced the good name of the great state in which these shows are held. Were it simply a case of poverty, a lack of funds and a hard-luck management there might be some little excuse for this cheeseparing stunt. But there can be no such plea from any society in the state of New York. Competent judges and good entry fees pay all expenses unless the management is hopelessly inefficient. Men that may be able to follow the plow, cultivate corn, handle swine, cattle or sheep are often wofully lacking in running a poultry department at a county fair. And yet such men, good as they may be in their own line, are too often placed in charge of a department that requires more experience and thorough knowledge than any other on the grounds of an agricultural fair. We invite exhibitors to freely express their opinions in these columns. It will do a lot of good and may change the order of things another year.

State Poultry Association

Every person interested in the poultry industry of Connecticut is invited to meet at the committee rooms of the Westhaven Poultry Association, Wednesday, November 22, at 2 p. m.

The object of this meeting is to organize a state poultry association for the benefit of all poultrymen, both "utility" and "fancy" breeders. And it is the desire of the promoters to have for its officers men from all branches of the poultry industry of the state. It is hoped that every class shall be represented as well as every county in the state.

If you can not attend but would like to be considered one of the promoters or charter members, or if you desire any special information regarding the association, write to Charles K. Graham, instructor and manager poultry department, Connecticut Agricultural College, Storrs, Conn.

To Columbian Wyandotte Breeders

It seems to be the desire of a number of breeders of this grand variety of fowls that a great display be made at the coming Madison Square Garden Show, and in this way prove to the public that our favorites are worthy of the strong claims made for them. So we take the privilege to ask all breeders to take a strong string to Madison Square Garden and not let a single bird of poor quality find its way to that show. The exhibit that will appear at that show will do much to decide the fate of the Columbian. We would suggest that every breeder offer some special on this variety, but these will have to be in the hands of Mr. Crawford no later than the 30th of October. We have the promise of a number of specials at this time, and look for a fine string. We think a meeting should be called to form a club at the same show. There must be quick work in this matter also.

There is now an application in the hands of the secretary of the A. P. A. for the admission of the Columbians at the meeting at Cincinnati. All looks bright for the Columbian.—Aug. D. Arnold.

Mr. Karl Heumann, formerly of Laurel, Md., will be located at his new home near Washington, D. C., about December 1 next. For the next thirty days he may be addressed at Laurel, Md., box 174. He is a new advertiser in The Feather and The American Fancier, and we believe, judging from what we have seen of his stock, that he can be depended upon to meet all demands.

We are pleased to announce that Darling & Co., of Chicago, poultry food and supply manufactures of the West, have established a factory in New York City. This brings them nearer to their eastern trade. Their products are in great demand as a result of their quality. These people have their home plant near the stockyards in Chicago, and are thus enabled to get a full supply of the best products for their purpose. It will be of advantage to our readers to make application to them for one of their latest catalogues, which furnishes full information.

The annual election of the American Pigmy Pouter Association resulted as follows for place of meeting: Boston 12, New York 10, Pittsburg 2, Chicago 1. For judge the votes were: A. D. Brown 13, J. F. Bardroff 9, Geo. Ewald 2, and A. M. Ingram 1.—E. C. Duffy.

A petition to have the Columbian Wyandottes admitted to the Standard was handed in at the meeting of the A. P. A. at Hagerstown. If beauty and uniformity in specimens bred counts, it's "easy" to have them accepted. They have complied with all show requirements, too.

A very large hatch of turkeys is reported from the South. The weather has been good for them in that locality.

A Hen's Teeth

are in her stomach. Give her good teeth and she'll digest good food for you and turn it into profit. The poultry raisers who supply their hens with

find it never loses its sharp points and corners. It is the best kind of teeth you can give your hens. Contains iron for yolk; lime, soda, magnesia for shell. It costs a cent a pound in hundred pound bags at your dealers. Agent wanted in every town. Send for free folder No 23 stands for distinct advance in Feed systems.

The Checkerboard Bag

"Purina Mash" is Distinctively Good.

Because: It is grain, meat and green food all in one—ready to mix with water and feed. A complete balanced ration—no adding of this and that necessary.

The choice combination of clean, sweet, sound grain gives all the grain variety a hen craves.

The choice beef it contains saves you the burden of buying and mixing meat scraps.

AND,—the REAL SECRET of Purina Mash—the one thing that other systems cannot SUCCESSFULLY duplicate—is its green food basis of

Purina Alfalfa Meal

—just the tender, succulent tops and tendrils of the second and third growths of alfalfa—the most APPETIZING and NOURISHING green food in existence—ground by our specially constructed machinery.

We have the most successful mills in the world for grinding the best part of alfalfa in this way.

Purina Mash is Profitable for You to Feed

Because: It goes farther than ordinary mashes or grain feed—contains more nutrition to the pound.

It has a GUARANTEED ANALYSIS—you know with certainty EXACTLY HOW MUCH actual food value your fowls get.

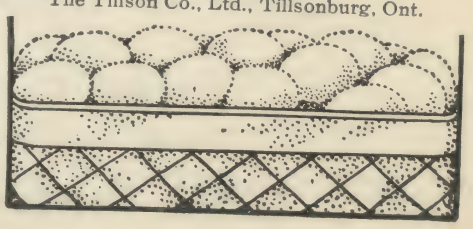
It is EVENLY MIXED—by machinery—every fowl gets the same uniform ration—it NOURISHES THE HEN while it MAKES EGGS and HELPS THROUGH THE MOULTING SEASON.

Because: It contains all the elements, in right proportion, for building bone, flesh, feather and eggs.

It is very rich in actual digestible nutritive materials, therefore IT MUST INCREASE YOUR EGG YIELD—for it gives the hen the necessary surplus of EGG-MAKING material to do it with.

This means also EGGS IN WINTER, the real profit in poultry keeping.

We want you to try Purina Poultry Feed. We have a test plan of selling introductory orders.



Four 40-pound bags—one bag each of Purina Chick Feed, Purina Alfalfa Meal, Purina Scratch Feed and Purina Mash. All shipped—freight prepaid—for $4.00. One-quarter of each bag free to try. $4.00 returned if not satisfied after test.

Write for full explanation of this test plan, good for 30 days only.

Our free booklet, "PURINA STANDARD FEEDER," tells all about our several feeds—gives you a safe, reliable, economical, profitable feed system, and many helpful hints to poultrymen. Write for it today—it is worth your while.

The New '06 Standard Prairie State

The improvements we have added to the Prairie State Incubator for 1906 are world-beaters. They have simply put the Prairie State in a class by itself. When we say we now have an incubator that will bring out every possible hatchable chick with less attention and less liability to disappointment than any other, we mean every word and can prove it with the machine. There are reasons for this—nine of them.

NINE NEW FEATURES

Here they are: 1. The self-evener or automatic gravity heat distributor. 2. Self-adjusting or compensating thermostatic, automatic heat regulator, three times as sensitive as the old regulator. 3. Automatic ventilation. 4. Automatic moisture supply. 5. Large air space above and below eggs. 6. Removable bottoms, making easy to clean. 7. Egg trays contain any size of eggs, hen, duck or bantam, without change. 8. Large incubators have chick drawers. 9. The system of heating that gives the highest per cent of hatches. We cannot go into details in this small space and explain why these features overcome all mistakes, ignorance of operation and neglect, but they do, and you will be interested to know how it is accomplished. Send for the New Standard Prairie State circular. It plainly illustrates and describes every detail. You will be surprised at the practical simplicity of these new ideas which make it possible for the inexperienced to operate it as successfully as the expert.

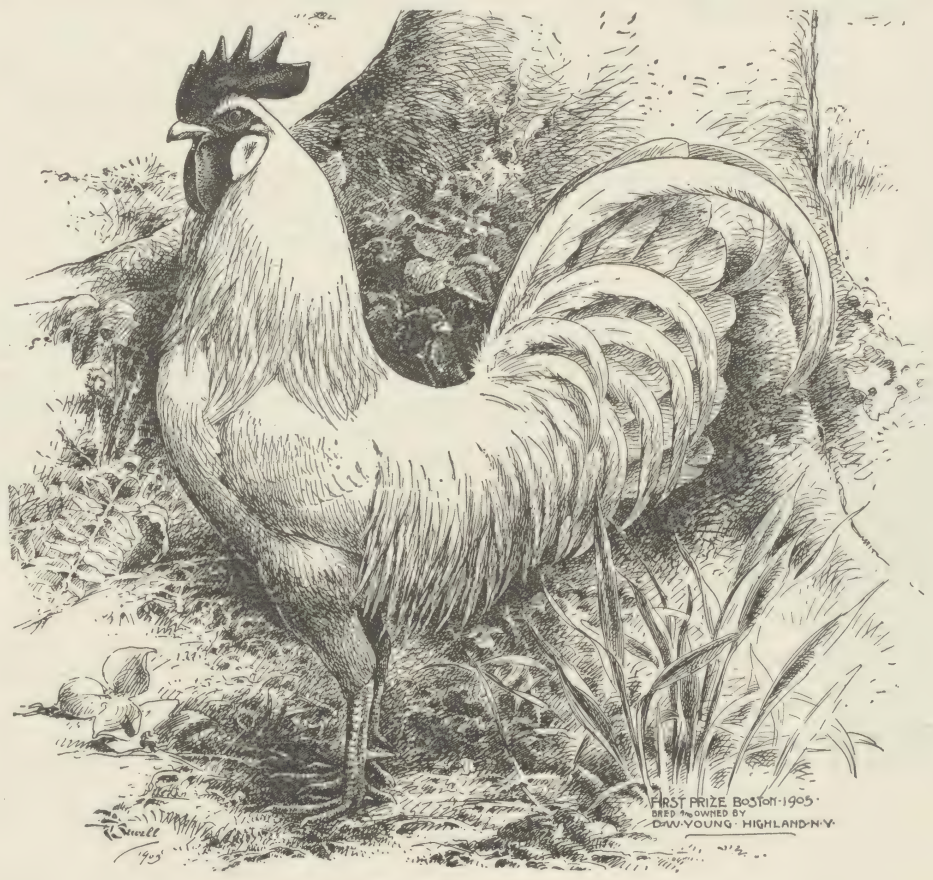
PERTINENT POINTERS

It is extremely disappointing to a thrifty, careful poultryman to go about and hear the sad destruction that is caused and encouraged in some localities by the care taken of poultry. Often the poultry houses that should have been thoroughly cleaned last spring have been left in such a pitiful condition that even the rats and dogs of the neighborhood would turn up their noses and run away rather than go therein. Think of the poor, mismanaged fowls that will take to the fence, the trees, or the gable of the out-buildings rather than go into the poultry houses, and the children of the owners could not be driven or persuaded to go and look for eggs the second time within the nests of that poultry house. These may be laughable conditions to read about, but are sad in reality, and are too frequently found where better things should exist.



This reminds me of an instance of years gone by, when the health commissioner of our city lived upon a beautiful farm on the right of the hill in the valley of the beautiful district known as the Scioto Valley. Near him was a neighbor so careless and thriftless that his negligence led to many complaints as to his management and neglect in reference to the health of the community. This man kept a number of cows, and hogs as well. The agricultural department of the state had been called to inspect his premises many times. He had been ordered to improve these conditions by the state authorities. Conditions grew worse, the result of a very wet season, until the stench that came from that locality to the home of my friend when the wind was right was almost unbearable. Finally he purchased the farm, then burned the barns and pig pens. The dairy cows were moved to another locality, and cleansed of their filth and vermin; the hogs were turned into a clover field. "In this way only," said my friend, "could I have ever saved the neighborhood of all the diseases that can come from filth."

If equally drastic conditions might be applied to some of the poultry dwellings and better conditions follow, it would prove profitable to the owners. Nothing has surprised us so much as the statement within the past few months of the New England doctor who tells us that lice do not produce ailments among poultry, but that ailing poultry produce the lice. I presume that the filth and heat of the southern districts do not produce cholera, but that the presence of cholera produces the filth and oppressive heat. We also notice these words in the columns of The National Stockman and Farmer: "It is another gloomy fact that poultry literature has been pretty evenly divided between the guess-so and phonograph types; a jumping at conclusions or a weary repetition of phrases which some one said many moons ago, and which those who came after found easier to repeat than to verify." Whether this be true or not, is not under consideration at the present time, but we do know that there is a strong demand for more practical truths in the teaching of the care of poultry; that we should have more good common sense published in this interest and the utter obliteration of impossible teachings set forth merely to induce people to embark in the business to make purchases of them.

For instance, a new breed or variety of poultry is presented to the purchaser; wonderful claims of superiority are made for them. In response to the liberal advertising of these new aspirants for honors in the columns of their papers, unlikely and unreasonable claims are made only to lead the purchaser to disappointment. It may be considered a remarkable statement, yet the facts are that every prize-winner, every successful aspirant for honors in the egg-laying contests have been either Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes or Leghorns. All three of these breeds originated in America, and up to the present time we do not think there has ever been in any country of the globe an egg-laying contest conducted in which any other kind of fowls have won the leading honors than the three breeds mentioned above. If we are contending, considering or talking about the vital foundation for success and profit in poultry culture, we must come down to the consideration of the ability of egg production.

Having wandered over several features of importance to poultrymen, we would recommend that poultry houses be kept in proper, presentable, tenantable condition; at all times fit for your friends and others to vist; free from filth, dirt and insect vermin. When winter comes see that the interior be made as comfortable as a poultry-house can be for its inmates. Have your incubators, brooders and hen-coops nicely cleansed and stored away during the winter months and everything put in shipshape order, so that visitors may be attracted by the surroundings and pleased with what they see. In this way a number of customers may be added to your lists which will more than repay you for the trouble expended.

In the selection of poultry choose the kind that pleases your fancy. Adopt the plan of care and feeding followed by the successful American poultryman; take your choice of poultry-houses and care for it; mate and select in your breed for superiority in egg production, and you will bring your selection, through the care and handling, up to a line where they will be equal to any. The success gained for American poultry is the result of selection, care, management and feeding for the greatest egg production and the finest market poultry in the world. If you will follow along these lines in the handling of any kind of land or water-fowls, you will increase the egg yield and incidentally your profit.

WHITE LEGHORN

Why don't you gather a lot of those windfall sweet apples that are under the trees in the orchard and throw them in the yard where the hens are. See how they will enjoy them. There is also some garden waste that should always find its way to the chicken yard. There should be no waste of any kind of food, green or dry, where there is a flock of poultry. Variety of food makes an egg diet for the hens, and is a great help to the growing chickens.

Exercise

I wonder how many of the poultrymen of to-day still fail to give the fowls plenty of exercise or rather to feed them in such a way that they will be compelled to work? Of course no one who calls himself up to the times would fail in this part of the work. A few will say, "Why must exercise be given?" Look for a moment at the way which nature intended that every animal should get its sustenance. It was not intended that any animal should get its food without working for it. So we can easily see the evils of lack of exercise. Allowed to remain idle and given plenty of feed will soon destroy the usefulness of any bird intended for laying purposes. And it will take longer to get the bird back to the proper condition for laying than it would to get it too fat. Exercise is as we may say life to the bird for it is only the active bird that proves itself an egg-producer. If we fail to make them exercise they get fat and certainly will not lay. A fowl too fat is liable to get some disease such as indigestion, etc. No need of allowing the birds to get fat except when intended for market and at no other time should they be allowed to become fat. There is a proper condition for the laying hen to be in which can be learned by experience. To be healthy and a good egg-producer the hen must be fed well and yet be made to exercise enough to keep down surplus fat other than that which should always be present. There must be some fat but not enough to be a detriment to egg-production.

Now, in regard to the way of giving them the exercise. In summer, on the range, they will get it in hunting for bugs, etc., but in winter it will be necessary to keep six or eight inches of straw or leaves on the floor and scatter the grain in it so they will have to scratch to find it. They should be given a small amount of grain in the litter early in the morning so they can get to work the first thing and not stand around. It is a good idea to scatter the grain in the litter at night after dark so they will have it ready for them as soon as they come off the roost in the morning before you will want to get out to feed them. The first feed should be a little grain in the litter, then if a mash is fed it may be given along some time in the forenoon after the fowls have warmed themselves up working in the litter; then give a little more grain to keep them at work. Also give them green food, etc. Then at night the full feed of grain that is usually given may be scattered in the litter. Care must be taken that this last feed is given early enough that they may have time to get a full crop before dark. It will not be too early to give it to them along in the middle of the afternoon, as the days are short during the winter, and it will take them some time to dig it out of the litter.—Percy W. Shepard.

Editorial Gossip

This seems to be a period in the history of poultry culture and poultry publications in which there is apparent a determination to get ahead of the nearest neighbor. A few issues ago we called attention to the fact that one of the pages of the new illustrated Standard had been spread broadcast in the pages of a poultry journal. Now comes Friend Heck, of The Successful Poultry Journal, who distributes the specified cuts which judges are authorized to make by the new Standard. We anxiously await further returns.

For some unknown reason the management of the Cincinnati Show and the president and secretary of the American Poultry Association have selected the week of January 16 to 20 for the next meeting of the American Poultry Association to be held in Cincinnati, Ohio.

There is scarcely a poultryman throughout the United States that does not know that that week is the week always selected by the management of the Boston Show. It was announced last winter during the show that the same week would be taken for January 16, 1906. It was thoroughly well known that matters of the gravest interest to the eastern breeders will be brought up at the Cincinnati meeting; yet in the face of all this, the responsible parties above mentioned have selected and announced the Boston dates. It would be utterly impossible for the Boston management to change their dates from the fact that they must make contract for the hall a year in advance, the same as must the New York management for the Garden Show.

We do not wish to have it understood that we would accuse the executive of the American Poultry Association, or the management of the Cincinnati Show for purposely selecting these dates, yet when the matter was called to the attention of some of them, they did not hesitate to say that the holding of the Boston Show at the same time would in no way detract from the interest of the western exhibitors. We thus publicly call the attention of the officers of the association, the executive committee and the management of the Boston Show to these facts, trusting that there may be some arrangement made whereby this matter can be properly adjusted so as to obliterate the possibility of the feeling already started growing into an outspoken accusation against those who used their influence in the strongest possible manner to carry the meeting as far as possible away from the eastern contingent. Like Cæsar's wife, the management of the American Poultry Association should be above suspicion. We trust that the poultry journals of the country will take up this matter and see, at least that justice is done to those likely to be disfranchised from this most important meeting.

Personally, this paper has no individual interest either way, but it has been and will be our policy to set forth wrongs of any character that may work an injury to any portion of the large army of breeders and exhibitors of standard-bred poultry. The life of the business, the future best welfare of the business depends upon fair, honorable treatment of all sections alike. Every time the association meets we must travel perhaps further than almost any other publication to be represented there. Our business interests might demand our presence and the presence of all poultry publications at both Boston and Cincinnati, and we believe that due consideration of these things should be given by the management of the Cincinnati Show, and that they should strive to arrange matters to meet the best interests of all.

The book on Game fowls, issued by The Feathered World, of England, is a valuable addition to the Game fanciers' library. This book contains a reprint of the old standard work on Game fowls and an up-to-date presentation of the modern Game fowl of to-day. There seems to be a revival of the breeding and exhibiting of both types—the old English and the modern Game fowl. This book, treating of both, adds additional interest to its contents.

The report of Pacific Poultrymen on the Lewis & Clark poultry exhibit, written by Harry H. Collier, states as follows: "All the classes did not fill, but as a whole the show was by far the best ever held on the Coast." The eastern critics of the poultry exhibit of the Lewis & Clark Exposition would compare same with the Pan-American and the St. Louis exhibit. This is not fair. This exhibit might be compared with the Centennial Exhibit of 1876 at Philadelphia. If the comparison with these two was properly made, there would be less difference between the two exhibits considered. We must remember that poultry matters are in their youth as yet upon the Pacific Coast, and we should also remember that some beautiful specimens came from that locality to St. Louis and won their portion of the prizes. Of late, entirely too much stress has been laid on breeds. Quality should have more consideration.

Another unfortunate condition was the fact that the Washington State Fair Poultry Show was held during the same week as the Lewis & Clark and the Puyallup fairs. Here, again, is a sample of contendtion against numbers and of dividing your forces in opposition to one another. Poultrymen should see to it that all such conditions are avoided in the future.

Mr. Theodore Hewes, of Indianapolis, judged at both the Lewis & Clark and the Washington State Fair Poultry associations. There is no use talking, Theodore is a long shot every time, and it is safe to lay odds on him both going and coming, as he is sure to turn up a winner every time. In his report of the Lewis & Clark display, he finds fault with the management for locating the exhibit in the background. This has been the practise since the exhibit at Philadelphia in 1876, and will continue to be so, so long as the exhibitors of stock of all kinds accept the situation and make their entries.

It is always a pleasure to record the fact that gentlemen of influence and experience have taken up the poultry business. Gen. E. A. McAlpin, so well-known in and about New York City, has equipped at his farm at Ossining, N. Y., a splendid plant for the improvement of standard-bred poultry. Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Leghorns are his specialties. We congratulate the General on having taken hold of an interest that can be made so much of, and we trust that under his careful management the stock from this plant may do as well at the great New York and Boston shows as they did at Hagerstown.

The readers of The American Fancier will regret very much to learn of the demise of Mr. Henry Tieman, of Baltimore, Md., who died the afternoon of November 3. His family and thousands of friends will mourn his loss. Henry was one of the type of pigeon fanciers that lasted every day in the year.

We are in receipt of a letter from Dr. Paul Kyle, of Flushing, L. I., in which he states that the entries for the Great Eastern Poultry Show have fallen off about one-half of what they were a year ago at Herald Square Show. This does not look as though two shows in New York City were overly popular.

The inclination to advise people to go a long distance from home to embark in a new business is rampant. The papers are crowded full of glittering claims of the great advantages of going to California as the best place in the world to grow poultry. Now the cry is, "Go South, to Florida." We know that money has been made in growing poultry in California. The profits in the growing of poultry will be largely increased in that locality. We also have personal knowledge of large sums that have been lost in the same place. There has been and will be a greatly increased return from poultry growing in the South. Up to the present time, however, it can not be said that the growing of market poultry and the production of eggs to any extent throughout the South has been successful. The time will come when all the difficulties of the Southern climate will be overcome. When that time comes there will be no risk whatever of going to the Southern country for the purpose of growing poultry. Those who live in the South are in the best position to take up the profitable growing of poultry. People who go from other localities into that territory should do so with the understanding that they must have with them sufficient funds, determination and lasting qualities to fight out the battle for a year or two so as to insure success. The fairy tales that are sent about of dropping cucumber seed in the ground one week and sending the fruit from the seed to market the next week is no more likely than some of the tales told of the possibilities of growing poultry and squabs in the South. It is just as hard work, takes just as much work, just as much care and attention to grow poultry and squabs in the South as in the North, West or any other section of the country. People anxious to go South for their health and embark in the poultry business should consider the proposition and learn from experience before embarking too heavily in the business.

The feeding of the fowls that are intended for exhibition calls for a plentiful supply of hard, well-dried, plump old wheat and a very small amount of cracked corn and hulled oats. Nothing is better than this manner of feeding for hardening the flesh and getting a full plumage. Too much corn makes a fat, soft flesh, and while the feathers at times show a pleasing gloss from being fed upon corn, a much better finish may be had through feeding as above stated, and adding thereto some sunflower seed and a little flax seed. Never feed flax seed to perfectly white fowls. To all colored fowls the flax seed is beneficial.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the American Barred Plymouth Rock Club will be held January 3, 1906, at the Madison Square Garden, New York. Besides the National Club cup there will be thirty-eight cash specials amounting to $450 awarded to members only. As Secretary Schwab puts it: "This will be the event extraordinary." That there will be a warm time in the Barred Rock alley at New York is an assured fact. It is reliably stated that two judges will handle the Rocks at Madison Square, and that Mr. Scudder, who has judged them for years there, will not be one of them.

The show to be held at Scranton, Pa., will be cooped and fed by Spratt's Patent. Entries will be limited to one thousand birds, and everything will be run on the most modern and approved lines. J. H. Drevenstedt will judge the American classes and F. B. Zimmer and W. J. Stanton all other classes, so we are informed. The exhibition will be held in the Music Hall, January 17 to 20, 1906.

The annual exhibition to be held at Stamford, Conn., takes place January 17 to 20. A. C. Smith and C. A. Ballou have been engaged to do the judging.

The premium list of the Western Connecticut Poultry Association is out. The annual show will be held at Danbury, Conn., as usual, and promises to be the largest and best ever held in the famous "hat-town." Competition is very keen in that neck of the woods always and promises to be more so than ever this trip. D. A. Nichols, W. N. Card and J. H. Drevenstedt place the ribbons. The show opens November 29. C. H. Brundage is the secretary.

Col. W. B. Atherton, editor of The American Stockkeeper, in the current issue of the latter, remarks:

"Are we going to be up against the same trouble on the down question that occasioned so much controversy some years ago? The new Standard refers to feathers on the shanks of smooth-legged varieties as a disqualification, but says nothing about down while the previous Standard reads 'feathers or down.' Now the old question comes up, Is down a feather? and it will probably have supporters on both sides of the question as did the one, Which hen is the mother of the chick, the one that laid the egg or the one that hatched it? If the committee on the Standard intended that down should not be a disqualification, why didn't they mention the fact and prevent any question about it, especially as this is referred to in the old Standard. This thing is liable to make some bad feeling before the show season is over. If the judges could get together and settle this question there would be no trouble, but if one judge is to let a bird with down on its legs go through and others insist that down is a feather and disqualify the bird, it will keep the exhibitor guessing, although we are free to say that a bird with down on its legs would not be shown that way if the exhibitor knew it, still if caught and disqualified isn't there a chance for a 'holler?'"

If the colonel will turn to page 14 of the glossary in the new Standard he will read: "Down—the first hairy covering of chicks; also the tiny tufts of hairlike growth that sometimes are found on the shanks, toes and feet of fowls. (Note: If quill and web are discernible to the eye, it is a feather.)" Consequently the real simon-pure down does not disqualify. We admit that a stronger definition of such a disqualification would have been more satisfactory, but it was hard enough to get what is intended in the Standard. There are still some fanciers (?) left who would disqualify the finest Rock or Wyandottes in the world for a pin-head wart on the face of a microscopic spot of gray-red or black in a covered-up feather. We trust the day is not far distant when the whole bunch of color disqualifications and a few other minor ones are fired out of the Standard and the rational laws that govern the awarding of prizes to first-class specimens rule.

The wind-up show in the West will be held at Indianapolis, under the auspices of the Fanciers' Association of Indiana, February 5 to 10, 1906. The Empire Cooping Company will do the caging and feeding. J. A. Tucker, George H. Burgott, W. Lauins, Ben S. Myers, W. C. Pierce, O. L. McCord, S. B. Lane and Theodore Hewes will officiate as judges. The exhibition will be held in Tomlinson Hall, one of the largest and finest in the state.

Mr. John Brayshaw's famous stud of English Owls was recently sold at auction in England, and brought close to four thousand dollars. This is a record sale and indicates the great interest taken on the other side of the Atlantic in really high-class pigeons. There was a very large attendance of leading British Owl fanciers and the bidding was spirited from the start to finish. When 119 birds realize the price stated above there is something doing in the Owl fancy. We wonder what 119 Owls would bring at auction on this side of the pond?

W. Theo. Wittman, the Allentown (Pa.) wizard in feathers, reports great success in his matings of Silver-penciled Plymouth Rocks. He attributes his success to pedigree breeding and double matings, which make culls conspicuous by their absence. This strain of birds is the result of blending Dark Brahma-Silver-gray Dorking and Mottled Java blood, carefully selected each year until the size, shape and color was firmly established. It took some years to accomplish all this as well as some heroic work in culling, but it has paid the originator well in the fine uniform flock of selected show and breeding birds he now has on his ranch.

One of the best articles on judging it has been our good fortune to read is the one signed "Judex," which appeared in our esteemed English contemporary, Poultry. The writer starts off by saying:

"I have heard it said that if a man desires to make enemies he should become a poultry judge. There may be some truth in this, for among a community so extensive as the poultry fancy there must inevitably be a few unfortunate beings lacking the power of reasoning, who look upon the judge who fails to accept their birds at their own valuation as a person appointed by destiny to disturb their peace of mind. But the man who would be deterred from accepting the onerous duties of a judge through fear of giving offense is not the person for the task. Courage and independence are among the most valuable assets of a poultry judge, and it is the worst possible policy to enter upon one's task with more consideration for the owners than for the birds."

While a poultry judge need not make enemies, except among a class of exhibitors that it is far better to have their enmity than their good wishes, the rest of the paragraph is worthy of consideration and should be appreciated by every honorable judge and exhibitor.

In speaking of mistakes or errors of judgment "Judex" remarks:

"But though mistakes do occur, what many people imagine to be an error can be attributed to nothing worse than a difference of opinion. It is not the fault of our comparative system of judging that these differences of opinion exist, for I believe the score-card system, as practised in America, is responsible for even more varying results. I have tried to judge by the standard of points drawn up for each variety, but found that whereas I would have considered it desirable to estimate a certain merit at fifteen points another man would have given it twenty, and, though we might have agreed as to the placing of the birds by the comparative system our respective "scores" would have differed by twenty or thirty points."

In regard to birds winning at one show and failing to do so at other shows, the above-mentioned writer and judge states:

"Some exhibitors apparently cling to the belief that a judge is in honor bound to confer favor upon anything that has previously received his award, and possibly a few judges act up to this principle, not in any spirit of dishonesty, but with the idea of being consistent. This may be all very well to a certain extent, but one is apt to drift across the boundary line, for it is only in exceptional cases of merit that a bird is able to maintain a winning career throughout the season and against all competition. The possession of a retentive memory, enabling one to bear in mind the hundreds of birds one handles in a season is a questionable asset. It may enable one to be consistent, if consistency takes the form of giving first to the same bird at every show whether it naturally deserves the award or not; but I think the interests of justice would be better served if judges forgot all previous awards and gave the prizes on their own opinions of the exhibits on the day's form. and I know that some of our best judges boast that they try to forget a bird as soon as they have judged it. This sort of thing naturally leads to seemingly strange happenings. A bird may win first at one show, and a few weeks later get nothing better than a card from the same judge, or vice versa. In most cases this is due not so much to wavering judgment as to varying conditions. Even the penning of a bird makes a vast difference to its appearance, and the judge, who has only a short time to devote to each specimen, has no opportunity to see how it would look in a better light or another position. He must judge it as he finds it, and in some varieties light and position make so much difference that a bird penned first high in a strong light and then low in a dull light will scarcely look the same."

ONE of the youngest and most successful business men of eastern New Jersey is Mr. L. S. Bache, of Boundbrook, whose picture we are able to present to our readers after a fashion that individually belongs to our special artist. Every one interested in poultry and artificial incubation is familiar with the fact that Mr. Bache was one of, if not the pioneer in the manufacture of non-moisture incubators. Our readers are familiar with the advertisement of the Standard Incubator Company, and this presentation introduces them to the head and front of the Star Company.

Some exhibitors, and old ones at that, also cling to the idea that a bird that won the blue ribbon when in his prime, at a big show some two or three years ago, should repeat the performance at minor shows as long as he is fit to show. The fact that age stamps itself on a bird, and that new candidates for the coveted prize appear year after year, never enters the head of the old exhibitor who is married, so to speak, to his old pet and erstwhile winner.

The winter show season opens at New York next week with the Great Eastern Poultry Exhibition at the Grand Central Palace. This will be followed by the show to be held at Gloversville, N .Y. So the Empire State will be strictly "in it" in setting the pace for what promises to be the greatest poultry show season ever held in America.

We are indebted to the Hon. J. P. Hilldorfer for a very handsome photograph of himself. The Black Minorca emperor of Pennsylvania looks younger than ever and promises to make matters decidedly lively in the Minorca alley at leading shows for years to come.

August D. Arnold has the Columbian Wyandottes fever in good and ancient form. There are others that will share it with him. We expect to see a great class of these coming fowls at the Madison Square Garden in January. Mr. Arnold has issued a call to all breeders and fanciers of Columbians to exhibit there, and, if possible, attend in person. A club is to be formed and application is to be made to the American Poultry Association for the admission of Columbian Wyandottes to the Standard.

Boston, Cincinnati, Stamford and Scranton all hold shows the same week in January. This will split up a number of strings and scatter "the boys" considerably. Clashing of dates is getting to be quite the thing. Newark, N. J., and Schenectady, N. Y., have both taken the same week in February with Indianapolis close on their heels. And there are others.

The 1905 catalogue of the American Plymouth Rock Club is a very formidable book of its kind, and reflects credit on the club and secretary who got it up. The club numbers twelve hundred members and is heralded as the largest poultry organization in the world.

BROWN'S BUDGET

Autumn leaves in the fall, or leaves in autumn fall. The bright foliage adds great beauty to nature, and makes the poultryman think of the excellent value of leaves for scratching material. There is a difference in them though. Maple, basswood, chestnut and other soft-leaved trees produce leaves that are of little value for scratching material, as they so easily pulverize when dry. Oak, especially scrub, black, red and white, and hickory are best for the purpose.

This is the third and last call for gathering the winter supply of road dust. The season of very unfavorable weather is at hand.

Watch out now for fowls that show running at the nostrils. Neglect may develop into cases of roup. All birds showing such symptoms should have at night an injection in the nostrils of the following: One ounce of coal oil, one ounce sweet oil, one-half teaspoonful turpentine, ten drops camphorated oil. Use a sewing machine oil can. A very slight pressure will be sufficient to squirt enough in the nostril.

Don't close the hen houses up tight because there is a touch of cold weather. The hens will stand lots of real cold weather and be the better for it, if the windows and roosts are so arranged that they will not be in a draft.

Some of the hens may be slow in molting, and become very "ragged." Such are very sensitive to the early cold raw winds of fall. A scratching shed open to the south is a place they will greatly enjoy. Such hens should have a little black pepper every other morning in their soft food.

How quick some people can graduate in the poultry business. I met a "fancier" (?) this fall who admitted that he had been in the business eighteen months and actually declared, "I feel sure I know all about the business, and know the breeds as well as any one."

Be careful about feeding new corn too soon. It is quite dangerous to give horses, and its bad effect on poultry is shown in more ways than one, especially where it is fed freely. It will cause "mysterious ailments," indigestion and bad bowels. Parching or browning (scorching) the grain on the cob now and then is a good change or entrée in the diet of fowls at this season.

A good morning feed at this season, which fowls and chicks have a special liking for, is made as follows: Oats, four quarts; wheat, two quarts; buckwheat, two quarts, and barley, three quarts. Put on enough water to cover all about two inches, and then put all on stove about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and let it cook slowly until bedtime. Of course watch that it does not boil dry and burn. It can be cooked so that it will make fully three and often four times the original bulk of the dried grains. My plan is to cook just fast enough to have the water evaporate, and then move to back of stove and let it steam quite dry, so that all the grains are quite separate.

When the ground becomes frozen or covered with snow, remember that all natural sources of grit supply are cut off. Be ready with a supply of grit on hand.

The "circuit riders" in the poultry arena see lots of fun and country. They meet "Rubes" that would make a gourd blush with envy. Some of them camp right on the fair grounds, and return home strengthened in health and pocketbook. When they discard their chicken toggery and come out in evening dress, and parade the town, they're good-looking fellows too. The next day when one hears them whistling or singing a line or two of "Everybody Works But Father," it is easy to guess they "took in" the theater the night before.

Frederick, Md., poultry exhibit was one of the best yet had on the fair grounds. It was too large for the new poultry house to accommodate. A good-sized tent contained the "overflow," as it was called. The strongest class was Black Minorcas, and all the winners were truly excellent specimens. There were others that will be "crack-a-jacks" when they get a little more age added. Quite a number of first-prize specimens at Hagerstown won the same honors at Frederick.

Many of the strings of birds at Frederick went direct to Dallas, Texas, where no doubt they will cause another overflow of regular accommodations. Some of the fall fairs can now quite truly be considered as the suburbs of the poultry shows.

Funny, but it was remarked by a number of people at Hagerstown that the crowd stuck to the poultry until the races started, and the two attractions seemed to be all the people were interested in.

A good many people were inquiring for Messrs. Geo. E. Howard and T. F. McGrew Thursday and Friday at Hagerstown.

Did you ever listen to the remarks of the passing crowd in a poultry show at a fair? "Law sus them whoodings. Uncle Bill used to keep 'em." Houdans were referred to. "Oh Mame here's sum just like our speckled ones." (Barred Rocks.) "Here's some covered with raw cotton." (Silkies.) "I s'pose them's the White Plimus Rocks." (Leghorns.) "I don't think much of them Bantys, they're so small. .Tom's got 'em twice as big." (Sebrights.) "Them's the kind father has, they are Black Spanish." (Minorcas.) "Here's some that have been in curl paper to get ready for the show, ain't it perfectly ridiculous." (Frizzles.) "Yes, father keeps Lakehorns, White Bramers and Dilusions." "Dese fowl make a man's mouf water," said a passing colored man. "Yes, I understand Vanderbilt keeps all breeds and raises thousands of each kind, ain't they pretty?" This from a handsome woman with a fine gown. Another colored man with a "stylish" colored girl said, pausing opposite a coop of White Wyandottes, "All chickens look alike to me," and his girl chuckled as she replied, "Spec dey all taste alike, too." "Dat's no joke, but sum ob 'em have more to taste ob dan de oders," and on they surged, laughing.

Mr. J. H. Drevenstedt on his way from Hagerstown to Atlanta "rested" Saturday in Baltimore, and was very favorably impressed with New Baltimore, the former burnt district. The writer went expressly to the city to have a little "visit" with "Drev."

The writer knows of two "school marms" who married farmers about two years ago. They induced their husbands to let them try poultry raising and the result has been in both instances that the poultry has proven to be the best-paying crop on these two farms. The business methods of the teachers applied to poultry raising proved what could be accomplished. On one of these farms preparations are now under way to increase quite extensively the poultry business, making it, in fact, the main feature on the farm. Good for the teachers.

WHITE PLYMOUTH ROCK

There is every reason why the best success should result from a combination of keeping pure breeds for the sale of breeding stock and eggs for hatching and also the surest way, economically, to keep down the size of the flock to a proper "dressed" specimens. Selling so-called basis. All surplus fowls, old or young, when sold in market, should be sold as culls alive is sure, sooner or later, to result in unpleasant trouble. Parties will occasionally purchase such, affirming their intention of killing them, but will not do so. Then you will hear from an outsider that So-and-so says he is breeding from some of your best stock," etc. Then you wish you hadn't.

The season just closing demonstrates that the commercial side of poultry raising is increasing just as fast as the so-called fancy side. Prices for poultry products have averaged higher the past summer than for years, and there has been a constantly-increasing demand for first-class products. No man who has energy backed up by the right ambition, need hesitate to embark in the poultry business.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND

By John Wharton

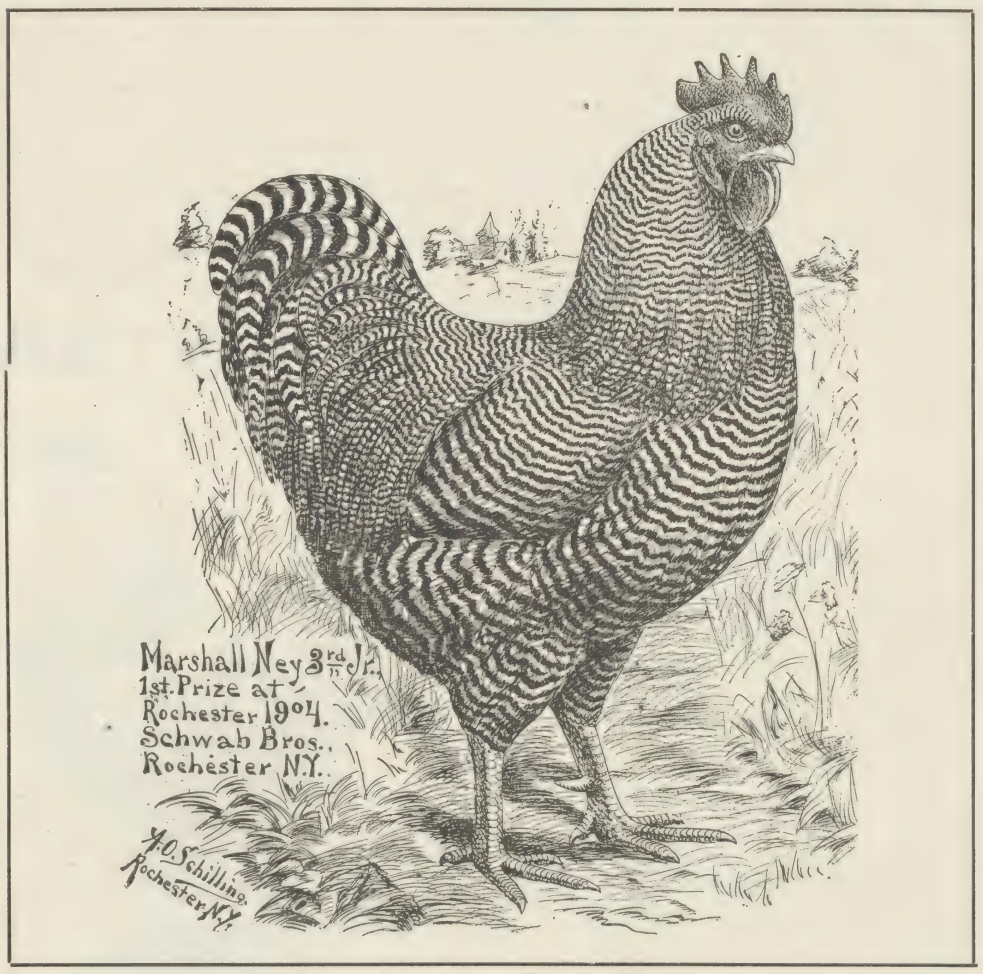
Since writing my last notes I have been knocking about a good deal. First, I had a pleasant holiday in Holland, visiting about among the Dutch fanciers. I have been over several times to their large winter shows, both as judge and exhibitor, but never before have I visited this wonderful country in summer. A pressing invitation from Mr. N. Walop, of Rotterdam, decided me to go over and see where all their exhibition birds were raised, and see the owners at their own homes. I have met Mr. Walop many times both on the Continent and at our big London shows, and I have learned to look upon him as one of my truest friends. I sailed by the Harwich and Hook of Holland route, and was soon landed at Rotterdam. Mr. Walop was there to welcome me, and we were soon at his house. By profession Mr. Walop is a grower of cucumbers—in fact the largest and oldest grower and exhibitor in Holland. He has a fine place and in the fancy he is known as a Wyandotte fancier, although he will purchase any kind of birds for which he has an order. In addition to his Wyandottes he has a nice lot of Lakenvelders and on his farm I saw the best Lakenvelders in Holland. He has exported quite a quantity to England. As a prize-winner and exhibitor he has been to Germany, Belgium, France, Spain, Italy and, of course, England, where he has won the highest possible honors. He has exported birds all the world over including a large quantity to India.

In going to the Continent the language is the chief difficulty, but as Mr. Walop could speak English we got on well together, and every day we were off visiting among the fanciers; it is needless to say we had a regal time. From what I saw and heard the fancy is not nearly so strong as in England. The reasons given for this are: The country being small there is not the scope that there is in your country and the people will not pay fancy prices, as the shows are few and the prize money small, the largest price ever paid for a bird at a show being one hundred guilders—about forty dollars." What does friend Northup think of this compared with the sale of the one-thousand-dollar Minorca cock? The hatching season begins about the close of March, and of course their shows are late compared to our English ones, the best being held at Utrecht and The Hague about the middle of December and January, respectively.

I noticed all over Holland how every cottage had its few birds kept in small covered runs about three feet to nine feet by the door side, while chickens in some cases were being reared in a top or second-story arrangement. Judging from what I saw the Wyandottes are the most-kept variety, and I was surprised how few of the old Dutch breeds we saw. At one place I saw some really fine Polands. The breeder had been drilling it into me how poultry would hardly pay and how the highest price he had ever received for a single bird was thirty-five dollars, when I asked him the price of a Poland before us. In an instant his eyes sparkled, and he said I will take for that bird one hundred and twenty-five dollars. Needless to say he is waiting to take it yet. I expect he thought he had a green Englishman in hand.

At The Hague I visited the establishment of Mr. Van Horzeel. He is one of the largest exhibitors in Holland, often making three hundred entries for a show. He keeps both pigeons and poultry. His poultry plant is a marvel for construction. I can not attempt to describe it, but it must have cost several thousands of dollars. It is built in a style to last, and is all painted white. At the time of my visit he had very few birds in it as they were in their summer quarters scattered over the farm.

I was home in time to visit Sandy Show, which is some forty miles north of London. Mr. John Lee is chief manager at this show. It was this gentleman who caused the sensation of our last show season by pluckily paying sixty-five pounds for a Partridge Wyandotte cockerel and afterward selling it for one hundred and sixty-five pounds—a profit of one hundred pounds. Naturally, with such a manager it is a well-managed show, and he being a Wyandotte fancier this variety was well catered to. Silvers and Golds turned up well, while Partridges made a grand show. Orpingtons in all colors were there in full force, and many birds of fine quality were penned. There were four judges to the poultry section, and their work was over by 1 p. m. and all the birds were safely packed for home by 7 p. m. The tent was crowded all day and I think it must have been a record gate.



From Sandy I went on to Rugby to pay a flying visit to our highly-respected secretary of the Partridge Wyandotte Club, Mr. A. M. Elkington. It was 11 p. m. when I stepped out of the train at Rugby, and there on the platform was my friend to meet me. We talked poultry topics until—I'd best not say what time—and then up early we were among his birds. Needless to say he has nothing but Partridges, and a nice lot he has. The popularity of the Partridge Wyandotte owes more to Mr. Elkington than any other living man. It was through him that the club, which is now the best specialist club in England, was formed, and needless to say year after year he is returned unopposed to his office and right well does he fill it, never missing a chance to write or speak a word in their favor.

Leaving my friend I went on to Benthaven, in Yorkshire. If you have traveled on the Midland Railway to Morcambe you have passed through it. A show was held here, but it was by no means a large one. Bantams, Wyandottes and Orpingtons were the best classes. Strange to say, although the two judges were well-known Hamburg breeders there were only three Hamburgs in the show. This illustrates the decline there is in the Hamburg fancy. Do what they will they never turn up worthy of the breed.

Haywards Heath Show took place the middle of September. It is a long way south, being some fifty miles below London. However, it is one of those shows you can not afford to miss. The secretary, Mr. Golding, is one of those fellows you can not deny anything. If he asks you to guarantee a class you at once say yes. If he asks you a special prize, you give it, and when he asks for entries you give him more than you ever intended to take across London. Mr. Golding is a well-known fancier of Buff Orpingtons, and I can well remember his conversion to the fancy and a rare recruit he has proved. Some men toil away at a thing all their lives and never make headway, while others seem to grasp the whole thing at once and make themselves famous and useful. The latter is Mr. Golding. As a fancier he has bred a Crystal Palace winner, and as a show secretary he has risen from the dust one of the largest and most-thought-of shows outside of London. Coming, as it does, just before the Dairy, it is a nice trial trip, and if you are successful there you await the Dairy with better hopes. The entries were over fourteen hundred, all single 1905 bred birds. The show was for two days, eleven judges were engaged, and they commenced duties at 10:30 a. m. and all prizes were awarded and cards up by 2 p. m., when the show was open to the public. Orpingtons opened the list, and several classes were given to the Buffs, two of the classes being for lady exhibitors only. There are many ladies in the Buff Orpington fancy, and I noticed many anxious faces going over these classes. Black Orpingtons came up well. In this class a cockerel bred and owned by Mr. Bell, of Ringwood Poultry Farm, was the center of attraction. Mr. Bell won first and second in cockerels, and first, second and third in pullets, a truly remarkable record, and in every way worthy of all they won. I heard more than one fancier say they would gladly give five hundred dollars for the cockerel, but he was catalogued at one thousand dollars. He was sired by a cockerel that Mr. Bell purchased at the last Dairy show for five hundred dollars. Once more this proves that a good bird is cheap at a good price when you know how to use him. Wyandottes were strong in numbers and fine in quality. Whites, Partridges and Silver-penciled averaged twenty-five a class, while Golds and Silvers were a trifle less. The special for best pullet of any breed in the show was won by a Partridge pullet bred and owned by myself, while the special for best bird in show was awarded to Mr. Firth's old English Game cockerel. I considered the Black Orpington cockerel ought to have had the award. Modern had no classes and only two put in an appearance in the any-other-variety classes. Bantams made a grand show and all the best breeders were there. I understand the takings at the gate were up a little on previous years, but there were fewer birds sold, so there will be less to the society on that score.

The agricultural shows are now drawing to a close, and many will remember this year as a disastrous one, as many have been held in wet weather and the takings at the gate must have suffered.

Stokesley, in Yorkshire, was held last week, followed by Northallerton the following day. I was at the latter. In our section competition was keen as many fanciers had come on from Stokesley with their exhibits, having had a round of three or four shows for the week. The weather was fine and every one seemed to enjoy the day, and I heard the gate was up.—September 27, 1905.

ANNUAL ELECTION OF THE PIGMY POUTER CLUB

The result of the annual election for place of meeting and club judge for 1906 was as follows: Boston 12, New York 10, Pittsburg 2, and Chicago 1. A. D. Brown 13, J. F. Bardroff 9, Geo. Ewald 2, A. M. Ingram 1. The meet therefore will be held in Boston, January 16, 1906, and Mr. A. D. Brown will be the judge.

Specials offered are as follows: Boston Show silver cup; A. P. P. A. annual young bird cup; novice cup (value $15); club special ribbon for each class; Mr. F. M. Skiles, silver cup for best 1905 black; J. F. Bardroff, $5 for best 1905 white (novice); E. C. Duffy, cup for best 1905 yellow (novice); W. A. Hersey, for best 1905 A. O. C. cup; J. M. Harned, $5 for best white, club banded; G. E. Howard, $5 for best 1905 yellow cock (novice); J. B. Quinn, cup for best 1905 A. O. C. hen, club banded; Chas. E. Schofield, $5 for best 1905 white hen (novice); A. D. Brown, $5 for novice winning the greatest number of points on ten or more entries; L. H. Jones, special not designated; A. E. Smith, four cups and $15. Others are: F. M. Blunt, cup for best 1905 blue cheque hen, club banded; F. Franz, set of razors for best 1905 silver cock and hen club banded; A. E. Smith, cup for best 1905 silver cock and two hens, club banded; cup for best 1905 two blue hens; cup for best display of black-blues and silver 1905 cocks and hens; cup for best display all colors 1905 cock and hens; $2.50 for best display (novice) all colors 1905 cock and hens; $2.50 for best blue or black cock or hen; $2.50 for best 1905 blue cock; $2.50 best old blue cock, American or English; $2.50 for best 1905 A. O. C. hen; $2.50 for best old black hen, club banded.

It will be seen that the competition between New York and Boston for place of meeting, and between Messrs. Bardroff and Brown for judge was extremely close, which made the race very exciting to me, in fact I thought at one time that it would take my own vote to decide it, but a bunch of ballots for Brown and Boston obviated that. I was under the impression that the West was going to make a stronger fight, but unfortunately there are not enough members out there to contest with the East. It is to be deplored that we can not get our fancy on a better footing in the Western States, and I think the members should take some steps to the betterment of this condition. In the first place a club meeting should be held there at least once every third year, and then a few birds entered at all the western shows would create an interest, for the Pigmy is only to be seen to be loved, and the lack of admirers of this prince of fancy pigeons is due to ignorance of his worth and winning ways. And to bring his highness more prominently before the western public two nice specials should be offered each year at two or three of the best western shows, one for the best display by an eastern member of the club and one for the best display by a western member. This, of course, would be necessary only when the club meets East. It is not necessary to make any special inducement when the meet is in the East to bring western fanciers, for with a list of specials such as is offered above, surely there is enough.

It has been known since last year that Pittsburg was after us, but the necessary push was not exerted and never a word was heard during the twelve months from the Fanciers' Club. Chicago, too, was very anxious for our meett, but was utterly left at the post, one vote. Think of it! The only member of the club living in Chicago did not vote at all. Oh, why don't somebody wake up out there and do some stunts. A grand show will be held there this year and every year hereafter, now that the two shows have combined, and we should get some of this good thing the next year or two.

Cleveland, also, was out for us as an attraction, but failed to get its offer in in time for the issue of ballots. The offer, however, would not have tempted many, I feel sure. But in the face of the magnificent work of the Boston members no offer would have been of any avail. The Boston members were determined to have the meet and to them alone is due the honor of success. Mr. A. E. Smith is the particularly guilty one. He certainly showed his metal, but the other members should come in for their share of applause. The special list shows how much they think of the Pigmy and how anxious they were to have the meet in Boston, and most of them are new members at that. Nearly all the new members gave a special, which should set an example for some of the old members who, with their past winning, could give some grand prizes and still be ahead of the game. I am in hopes that the prize list will be even larger when the members learn the result of the election, a notice of which was mailed each member a few days ago, and now for the entry, to decide the specials. It will be seen that they are arranged for displays and combinations of classes for the purpose of drawing out every bird that the members think has a chance to win, and it will do it, too. This, in connection with the many fine novice specials—which I have all the time promised—the large number of new members and other eligible novices and the magnificent club ribbons should and will draw a collection of Pigmies, the largest and best ever seen. It is to be remembered also that the entry fee is but fifty cents.

The larger the classes the better it is to win, everybody has a chance and by helping the meet you help yourself.

There will be twenty-eight classes. Old cock, young cock, old hen and young hen in each of the colors, Black, Blue, Red, Yellow, Silver, White and A. O. C.

Old birds must wear American seamless bands and young birds the club band of the year and bred by the exhibitor. In deciding displays and combination specials a first counts six points, second four, third three, fourth two and fifth one point.

The judge will be furnished with a list of the band numbers registered by each member for his guidance in the awarding of specials in young bird classes after the judging for regular premiums.

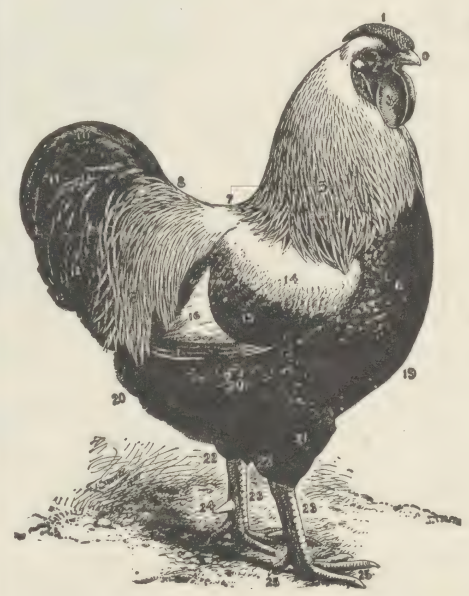
Here's to Boston this year and the West next. If they are weak it is only in point of numbers, and until in this respect they are as strong as the East let us help them all we can. Let us be as magnanimous with the advantage we have as we will be defiant when the terms are equal.

The happy anticipation of this festive club meet must needs be saddened by the untimely death of Henry Tieman on November 3, 1905, one of our fellow-members, a most valued and popular fancier, a loyal, esteemed friend and an honored and worthy gentleman. It is with deep sorrow that I have to announce this blow to his friends and the fancy in general. By his death the fancy has lost one if its stanchest supports, one of its most capable and squarest judges, who had a knowledge of all varieties of birds that was simply wonderful for one brain. His absence from the shows will be sadly felt, and our dear, jovial and good friend "Hennie" will ever be remembered and missed by those who knew him best for what he was. The members of this club join in their sympathy and regret for the great loss to his family.

It has been suggested by a number of the A. P. C. to start a subscription for a memorial cup in his honor and memory. The terms have not yet been completed, but it is certain that a nice sum will be donated by the American Pigeon Club and other clubs with which he was associated, and it is hoped that the Pigmy Club will do its share to the very fullest of its possibilities.—E. C. Duffy, Secretary.

Wisconsin State Poultry Show

Arrangements have just been completed for the ninth annual exhibition of the Wisconsin State Poultry Association, to be held in Oshkosh from January 15 to 20, 1906. This will without doubt be Wisconsin's leading show, backed as it is by a generous state appropriation. Both of the judges selected have national reputations. Judge J. J. Lambert, of Apponaug, R. I., will handle the American classes as well as a few minor breeds. Judge Charles McClave, of New London, Ohio, will pass upon the Asiatics, Mediterraneans, Bantams and water-fowl, besides some of the other varieties.



The prize list has been entirely revised, and it is now possible to win a $5 first prize with a thirty-five cent entry fee. Fifteen silver cups will be offered for competition besides numerous cash special prizes and a large number of specials. The large Company B Armory Building has again been secured at great expense. Uniform coops will be furnished free by the Association. Premium lists will be ready for mailing December first. The secretary will be glad to send you one.—Frank W Radford, Secretary, Oskosh, Wis.

The American Fancier

A NATIONAL MAGAZINE DEVOTED TO POULTRY, PIGEONS AND PET STOCK

Volume XXIV | Washington, D. C., November 18, 1905 | No. 629

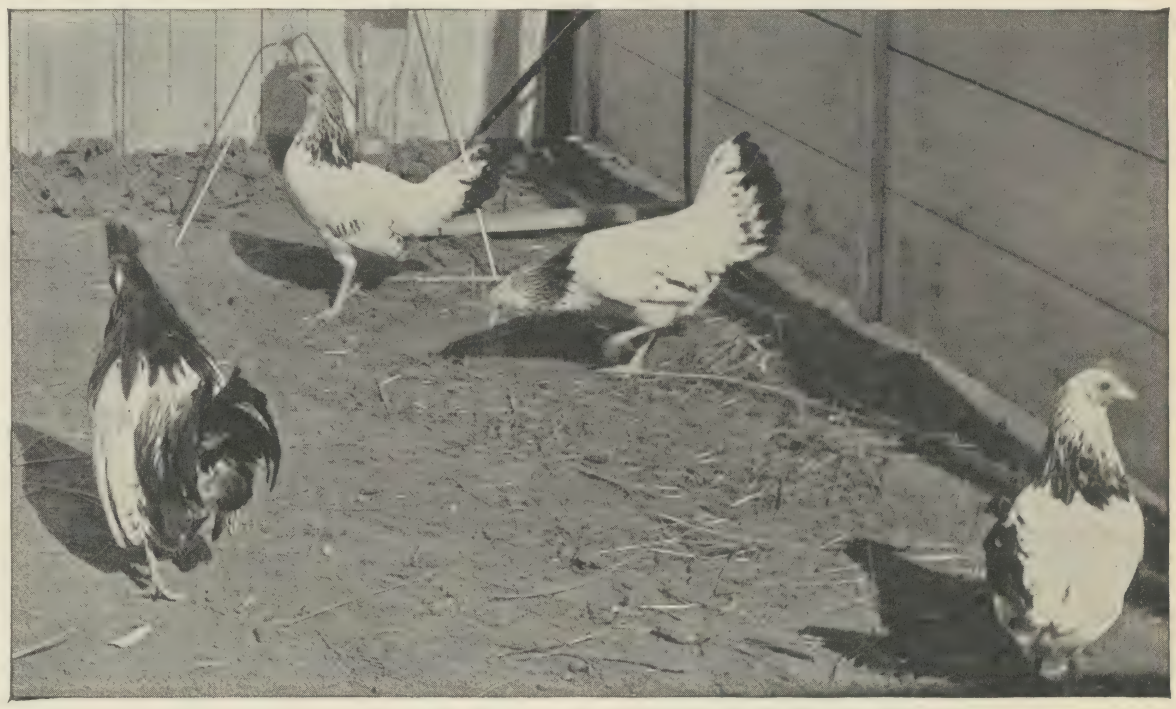
ORPINGTON A. P. A. STANDARD

I like the liberal manner in which The Fancier has recently and repeatedly invited any poultry breeder, prominent or otherwise, to ventilate his views through the columns of its paper. I like it also for its weekly, and not monthly, coming, laden with all the freshest and best poultry news and experience, and with your further permission will use it from time to time when the mood is on.

This time I desire to call attention to the new A. P. A. Standard just issued, not that plenty of "attention" has not been given it already during the long period of its making up. But now that it is completed and before the public for criticism, it is subject to fresh attention as to its merits and demerits. Thus far I have seen no criticism in any paper. Everybody seems to be waiting to see what everybody else has to say. Having been secretary of the American Orpington Club during the time of the preparation of the book, and never permitted to see the pictures or read the letter press copy before publication, I confess I have been on the anxious seat for a very long time as to what the book might contain regarding the "Orpingtons." Now I have to confess that the old saying "never cross a bridge until you reach it" is mainly true in this instance and I have borrowed trouble without apparent cause, for I find on close comparison of the Standard for Single-combed Buff Orpingtons, as it appears in the "Standard of Perfection," with the standard adopted by the American Orpington Club as printed in its catalogue, that the two are identical in all respects but one, except that the language used has been varied in the "Standard of Perfection" to accord with the general literary merits of the book. The one description changed is that relating to the back of the Orpington male and female. The club standard reads: "Back broad, of medium length and rising with a slight concave sweep to the tail." The A. P. A. reads, "Back broad, long, rising with slight concave sweep to tail." The change from "medium length" to "long," has caused the artist to draw the female accordingly, while the picture of the male retains the medium length and the U-shaped curve of the club standard. The explanation of this is given in the A. P. A. Standard as follows: "The abundance of hackle and saddle feathers on the Orpington male gives him the appearance of having a short back" and, "tail forming no apparent angle with back where these sections join," which is virtually the same as the U shape of the club standard.

The committee evidently went below the surface into the anatomy of the birds, and in this respect they are right in their application. They might, also, have explained that in the case of the mature females the cushion which does not appear so much in the pullets gives the hens the concave sweep to the tail also, doing away with the angle which appears in the picture.

In confirmation of this anatomy consideration I have a diagram of a Single-combed Orpington hen of mine, made by Mr. A. G. Goodacre. The hen when denuded of feathers conforms closely to the Standard of Perfection picture of the female Orpington. I also have a picture of the hen posing for picture, both this and the diagram showing her in a crouching and not natural position. The third picture I have shows her in a natural position when off guard with other hens in the pen and the natural position picture shows the cushion which gives the concave sweep of the tail without the angle at the base.



If the judge in passing upon the Orpington hen will keep these three positions which are taken by the same hen in his mind he need not be disturbed by any lack of conformity in the specimen to the picture. In the show coop the hen will assume the natural position very likely, while in the judge's hand she will conform to the anatomical shape of back in the picture. A fair judge must consider these differences in placing the ribbons on the mature females of which the Standard gives no special picture. It matters very much whether the judge considers the long back with or without the cushion feathers. Until some prominent shows have been judged by the new Standard a little uncertainty will prevail in this regard.

As a whole, however, the club have little to complain of in the new Standard. The committee adopted the suggestions of the club made at the annual meeting of which Secretary Orr was present, that specimens showing not over one-third white in lobe are not to be disqualified under the new Standard as they have been by some judges under the old Standard, much to the disgust of the originator of the breed, the late William Cook. Many of the finest specimens in all other respects were thus thrown out and the ribbons given to poorer birds. Of course under the new Standard, other points being equal, the specimen having the least white or no white in lobe, will receive the highest place. The weights have been raised in conformity with the wishes of the club.

Thanks are due to the American Orpington Club members, Secretary Orr, of the A. P. A., and Vice-president F. W. Gaylor, and the late William Cook, who were at the Rochester meeting when the recommended changes were allowed. I do not think the club will have any complaints to make as to the judging under the new Standard. They can go on breeding along the same lines as heretofore.

In conclusion I wish to call attention to the beautiful way in which the book is given to us, its artistic and elaborate finish on high-toned paper, and particularly the fine binding on the two-dollar edition. The extra fifty cents paid for this edition is very satisfactorily invested.

Now we are ready for the shows and their resulting experiences. The A. P. A. Standard raises the weights of the club standard one pound each, to which there should be no objection, as many specimens nowadays easily reach these limits, and the birds are nearest to the limit of weight, on either side, below or above, receive the ribbons, so that it is not desirable to continue breeding for larger weights than the Standard calls for, possibly at the expense of utility in egg production.—Wallace P. Willett.

LAKENVELDERS

A. P. A. Meeting

The Howard Publishing Co., Washington, D. C.:

Perhaps the best answer I can make to your letter of the 6th instant and editorial in the November Feather is to state the facts in regard to the selection of the dates for our Eighth Annual Exhibition, at which time we are to have the honor and pleasure of entertaining the American Poultry Association.

For six years we have held our show in the third week of January and at our last show, in January of this year, we announced the same dates for our show in 1906. At a meeting in February some of our members suggested an invitation to the American Poultry Association to meet in Cincinnati during our show, and the idea meeting unanimous approval, the invitation was sent and, to our great satisfaction, it was accepted by a majority vote of the Executive Committee.

During March and April I wrote personal letters to each and every one of the officers and Executive Committee, calling attention to our invitation, giving the dates for our show and asking their votes.

The only suggestion of a change in the dates was made by a western man, but we had already engaged Music Hall, the only suitable building in Cincinnati for a large show, and had secured the services of four of our judges for those dates, so that it was too late to make a change, even if our members had wished to break our long-established custom.

It would be advantageous to us, as well as to Boston, to have our shows in different weeks next year, but it is quite impossible for us to consider any change now, although we would certainly like to have all of the eastern men here during our show.

All of the above items have been matters of public knowledge for months, and I can not see how the selection of our long-established dates could be "an astonishing surprise to the entire East," and I do not believe that any one, east, west, north or south, knowing our members, would give a moment's credence to your statement "that it was purposely done to keep away the eastern membership."—Thomas J. Foy, Secretary, the Cincinnati Poultry and Pet Stock Company.

Editorial Gossip

Now that the show season is at hand the trumpets are being sounded as to the honesty of the judges, exhibitors and poultry-show management. It has become entirely too customary to cry "dishonor" against all of these by those who do not win as many prizes as they think they should.

If we were going to select the most careful, the most particular, and the most absolutely honest portion of the poultry fraternity, we would place the poultry judges among them. Their honor, business and reputation is at stake. No one of them can afford to act in any other manner than that which seems right and proper within their own judgment.

There is another much-harped-on condition, and that is the exhibition of borrowed birds. In every other kind of stock in the world—horses, cattle, sheep and swine—nothing is ever considered but the individuality of the specimen that wins the prize. In fact, what does it matter to whom the specimen really belongs when it is exhibited? It may not belong to the exhibitor twenty-four hours after it is shown. Exhibition stock is gathered from all over the world. Often the same specimens will win at New York, Chicago and Boston, and but few people will be any the wiser. From whence came the winning White Wyandottes at New York last winter? From where were the Plymouth Rocks gathered that won and did not win at Boston and Chicago? How quickly some of these changed ownership in the exhibition hall, and we doubt very much if any one was injured thereby.

We fail to see the distinction so finely drawn as to borrowed birds. What is the difference whether Jones borrows of Smith and shows at Chicago and then loans them to Brown to show at Kansas City; or, whether Brown buys of Smith this week to show at Chicago and sells them to Jones to show at Kansas City the week following?

We know that the object of all this is to protect the purchaser of stock and eggs who may be influenced by the awards. There is only one settlement of this entire question, and that is that Smith, Jones or Brown shall be honorable in their presentation of stock for sale, and not pretend to have for sale that which they do not own. This is the one real question at stake, and the question of who grew, owned or exhibited the specimen has but very little influence.

We know that the most valuable trademark a breeder can have is the ability to truthfully say that he bred, owned and retained in his yards al the specimens shown by him. Every one recognizes this condition. At the same time, when a man states that he won certain prizes at an exhibition he states the facts, but whenever he states that he owned, bred, exhibited and retained the winners in his yards, and this is not true, he simply can be charged with false statements and with obtaining trade under false pretenses. He individually has wronged himself, and would intentionally wrong the general public, and it has nothing whatever to do with the fine distinction often strictly drawn as to whether a bird was borrowed or bought. The real question of interest to the purchaser is whether he is getting that which he bargains for, without reference to the ownership of any individual prize-winner.

When you place your poultry in their winter quarters do not remove them from outdoor conditions to close, confined buildings without proper ventilation. It is absolutely necessary to remove the fowls to closed buildings for the winter months. When this is done remember that the presence of a large number of fowls in a building may change the temperature so as to make it quite uncomfortable if closely shut up. Avoid drafts of cold air at all times, but give plenty of proper ventilation.

It is quite as easy to have the interior of all your poultry buildings reasonably clean and tenantable for both fowl and attendant as it is to have them filthy, dirty and unattractive. Keep your poultry buildings in presentable shape. Always have them so that you can invite your friends within without apologies for the condition. Whenever the keeper of poultry tells you when you start to his houses, that he has not had time to clean up lately, look out for yourself. But when he says, "I try to keep them as nice as possible," you need not fear the attack of vermin when you go therein. Have your poultry houses so that there will be no necessity for apologies and you will know that they are all right.

A little coal-oil painted over the under part of the roosts and over the resting places will remove the danger of insect vermin, mites, etc. Apply it once or twice a week in warm weather; once in two weeks in winter will be sufficient.

Dry feeding is the natural principle for feeding poultry. The only reason that mash foods are used is on account of their ready and quick assimilation by the poultry. When fowls laid but thirty or forty eggs per year it was quite easy for them to grind up and assimilate sufficient food to produce these eggs; but, since they must produce from one hundred and fifty to two hundred eggs each, it is necessary to aid nature. This can most readily be done by feeding properly-made mash food. This is the reason for using the mash food; not that it is better than the dry grain, but because it is most readily handled.

The question of the proper time to feed the mash food has been thoroughly well threshed over in the last few years. Personally, we favor the noon-day mash during the winter months for the reason that the poultry usually rests and basks in the sun at this hour of the day. If the mash food is fed at that time it is quickly eaten, and a satisfied appetite induces the poultry to scratch and wallow in the dust in the sunlight, which is of great benefit to them. The morning and evening meal of grain thrown into the litter during the winter months forces the healthful exercise at the proper hours of the day.

There is nothing so true as that there is something new to learn each day in the poultry business. Very few ever become so thoroughly well informed as to know it all. Each day, each year brings new improvements, changed conditions, and more successful management to those who continually study for improvement. Those who feel satisfied with what they know and sit down contentedly are usually outrun by those who work continually in and out of season for better results.

There is a great movement in progress for the combination of fruit, poultry, squabs and bees. From all of these money can be made, provided those in charge have the ability and the experience to manage. Never imagine that you can take hold of a business of this character without any experience whatever and make money at once. You must be thoroughly well-trained to the business to manage them profitably. When you have gained the experience, you are sure to make money, provided you are energetic and thrifty. The lesson taught from this is that you should seek experience through a small beginning, follow it up carefully till your plant has reached a magnitude sufficiently large for all your wants. Go slow; grow up with the plant, and you will be successful.

Mr. Theo. Hewes, president of the Fanciers' Association of Indianapolis, reports in a recent letter that the outlook is very good for the coming show to be held at that point during the week of February 5 to 10. Whenever Mr. Hewes takes hold of a matter of this character something must be doing. We acknowledge an invitation form good-hearted Theo. to spend the week of February 5 with him in Indianapolis.

We just received a letter from Geo. H. Northup in which he states that he has received a visit from the gentleman from Germany who purchased so many of his Rose-combed Black Minorcas some time ago. The Count carried home with him some more of Mr. Northup's best, which speaks well of the year's test of the high-priced specimens he carried home two years ago.

Mr. George Purdue has returned to his home in Orange, N. J., after a year's sojourn on the Pacific coast. Mr. Purdue is very much improved in health and will be found acting as one of the judges at Madison Square Garden next January. He will handle his famous specialty, the Light Brahmas.

We are pleased to announce that Mr. F. R. Lovelace, of Millbrook, N. Y., won first on pen of young Rose-combed Brown Leghorns at the Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) Fair. There was an error in the show report, which did not give Mr. Lovelace credit for same. We also wish to say that the award of first pen on Single-combed Brown Leghorns was omitted from the Hagerstown report. Mr. Lee Pitchlyn won first on a beautiful pen at Hagerstown.

It is reported to this office that chicken-pox is very prevalent throughout some sections of the country. This is a highly-contagious disease, which affects both old and young fowls. When once it attacks a flock it usually runs through the entire lot and is very destructive indeed to young chicks, but the old fowls usually recover. The only treatment that seems to be of much use is to dissolve a level teaspoonful of Epsom salts in a pint of warm water. When thoroughly dissolved, allow the chickens to drink of this the first thing in the morning. After they have once drunk of this water in which the salts have been dissolved, take it away, give them a mash food to eat and the regular allowance of water thereafter. In addition to this, anoint the parts affected with carbolized vaselin.

Mr. Arthur O. Schilling, the well-known poultry and animal artist, is back at his home in Rochester to stay for the winter. He reports the loss of his best Buff Cochin pullet. The latter has not been returned from the Hagerstown Show and any information regarding this bird will be greatly appreciated by Mr. Schilling. His address is 443 Central Park, Rochester, N. Y.

The Great Eastern Poultry Show at New York the past week closed with about twenty-five hundred entries. Report and awards will appear in our next issue.

A great scarcity of broilers was reported the past few weeks although roasters and all other kinds of poultry, ducks, etc., were plentiful. It would pay some poultry raisers in this section of the country to make a business of fall broilers. Everything now is spring and summer broilers and when October comes around the supply of young stock is usually exhausted. The fall months in northern New York are usually splendid for the growth of the feathered tribe.

A writer in The Southern Poultry Courier claims that sore head, the scourge of southern poultry yards, is caused by chickens eating watermelons and has made a number of experiments to prove his claim. Too much melon is likely to cause soreness in human beings, but whether a chicken is really affected the same way we do not know. We would be glad to hear from some of our southern subscribers regarding the cause of sore-head and also the cure or preventive.

Mr. H. J. Quilhot, of Johnstown, N. Y., writes: "I note your article in The American Fancier regarding the management of agricultural fairs and the selection of judges. You are on the right road. This matte should be agitated often and copies sent to officers of agricultural societies to have the desired effect." Mr. Brundage on another page of this issue cites a few facts regarding incompetent judges at county fairs, that will be read with interest by intelligent exhibitors.

The McKean County Poultry and Pet Stock and Horticultural Society will hold its next annual exhibition at Bradford, Pa., the week commencing January 29, 1906. Ira C. Keller will judge the poultry.

A poultry show will be held at Wilmington, Del., January 9 to 12, 1906. It is many years since there has been a poultry show in the old Blue Hen State.

Schenectady, N. Y., is preparing for its next big annual show to be held January 31 to February 3, 1906. H. J. Quilhot, B. W. Mosher and J. H. Drevenstedt will place the ribbons. The Electric City Poultry Club has been successful in the past three years in pulling off large poultry exhibitions and expect to surpass all records at its next one.

The entries for the Gloversville (N. Y.) Show are closing as we pen these lines and the indications are that a very big entry has been secured. There will be some very warm classes in the Rhode Island Red alley from what we can learn.

B. W. Mosher, Frank B. Sutliff and Elmer Plantz, all of Johnstown, N. Y., left last Friday night for New York, where Mr. Mosher is superintendent and the other two well-known poultrymen are his assistants, at the Great Eastern Poultry Show. This experienced trio should have no trouble in handlng any exhibit, no matter how large. They have been there before.

The condition of the dressed poultry market in New York City for week ending November 11 is summed up in The New York Herald of latter date as follows:

"There is an oversupply of poultry in the New York market, which has brought a demoralization in prices and filled the cold storage houses. The receipts this week will amount to about one and a half million pounds, and there is a promise of continued large receipts, particularly from the West.

"Dealers were buying the very best dry picked selected spring turkeys for eighteen cents a pound, and were paying as low as fifteen cents for the average run of dry-picked stock. The first of these will be sold to-day to consumers for from twenty-five to twenty-eight cents, and the average run from twenty-two to twenty-five cents. A large lot of scalded turkeys of low grade will be retailed this morning at from eighteen to twenty-two cents.

"It is only the very choice grades of both turkeys and chickens that are at all scarce and they are in large demand.

"Chickens in greatest demand yesterday were Philadelphia dry-picked fancy broilers that weighed not more than four pounds the pair. For these dealers were paying as high as twenty-four cents a pound and twenty cents for the average run. This morning consumers will be asked from twenty-eight to thirty cents a pound for these, the average price being $1.25 a pair.

"Dealers are paying sixteen cents for the average New York dry-picked broilers and twenty cents a pound for the fancy variety. The best western stock brought seventeen cents yesterday and was retailed at twenty-five cents. Chickens from the South are three cents less. Philadelphia roasting chickens, from eight pounds a pair and over, of the best quality, cost dealers twenty cents a pound yesterday and were sold to consumers for twenty-six cents.

"There is a fair demand for Long Island spring ducks at twenty-two cents. Fair white geese were sold yesterday for twenty-five cents, while dark ones could be had for twenty-two cents. Prices to dealers for these were five cents less."

The above indicates closely what the Thanksgiving week prices are likely to be. The evidence of a larger poultry crop than usual, continued mild weather and cheaper grain are likely to keep prices low, except for the fancy products, such as broilers, baby broilers, turkeys, guineas, and, later on, capons. Cold storage plants are playing a very important part in the game of regulating prices for poultry, egg and game products. It looks as if some of these plants were overstocked at present, i. e., in some lines. Eggs seem to keep up in price and the belief is general in this section that thousands of dozens have been stored away in cold-storage houses and many smaller lots are immersed in water-glass.

An old-time fancier and breeder of Brown Leghorns remarked the other day: "You chicken fellows can talk what you please about the quality of Brown Leghorns to-day and holler about the double matings that produced all such. Why, I bred better Browns twenty years ago than anything I have seen at poultry shows or in yards lately. My birds won first prize in competition with twenty other trios. You don't hear of any such competition to-day. I tell you the secret of producing such fine birds was changing roosters every year!" This beats line breeding and double-matings and might be advocated by lecturers at farmers' and poultry institutes as much simpler than the laborious methods employed by fanciers. The faith of the old-timer quoted above is natural enough as he had not seen Brown Leghorns of his type in many years, and, no doubt, like the fish caught by an amateur, it grew and grew more important as the years rolled by.

We handled and judged Brown Leghorns a great many years ago at New York and have noticed the annual exhibits there as well as at other important shows and believe that a distinct and marked change for the better has taken place in the Brown Leghorns of America. The shape and style has been maintained, the comb and head-points are better and the greatest improvement noticeable is in the uniformity of the color in the best strains of females. A type has been established that did not exist before. The evenness and softness of the brown color and penciling in the backs and wings of well-bred Browns is far more common to-day than it was ten years ago. The work of Morris, Wittman, Burgott and others, in this diection, has borne good fruit. In the male line the striping of hackle and saddle feathers has been improved and perhaps the only criticism to be made is that the color demanded for males is too dark. We always fancied the rich orange-red of the crack males some ten or fifteen years ago, the kind that the late Dr. Dorsey bred. All this change for the better in the popular Brown Leghorns has been accomplished by the double-mating system. To go back to single-matings, using standard-coolred males and females in the breeding pen would soon destroy the work of years and the progeny, both male and female, would become uncertain in color and lose the characteristic markings so dear to the heart of the real Leghorn fancier.

Gallery of Fame

W. W. KULP

ONE can scarcely mention Rose-combed Brown Leghorns without immediately thinking of W. W. Kulp, of Pottstown, Pa., one of the long-time successful fanciers of the country. Pennsylvania is a great state, and Mr. Kulp is one of the great fanciers of the state.

The special prize-list of the National Bantam Association has just been issued and includes a liberal allotment of cash for each and every variety as well as some larger morsels in the shape of good old gold and the "long green" for Cochin and Sebright Bantams. The excellent organization noted above will hold its annual meeting at Madison Square Garden, New York, January 2 to 6, 1906, and a very large entry in all classes is expected.

Purina Mills, St. Louis, are getting up some exceedingly clever advertising matter which is bound to attract wide-spread attention. The specialties of this big concern are the Purina Mash, Scratch Feed, Alfalfa Meal and Baby Chick Feed. These will be pushed and advertised most extensively during the coming season.

That Rhode Island Reds are becoming popular in this section, where mostly strictly fanciers' fowls are bred, is an undeniable fact. We hear more Red talk than anything else just now. In order to satisfy ourselves that the Reds captured Amsterdam, the Carpet City of the Mohawk Valley, some ten miles from Johnstown, we took a trip last Friday to Mr. Edward De Groat's poultry ranch, located just outside the city limits of Amsterdam. Ten years ago Mr. John Teller De Groat had that fine plant stocked with several hundred Buff Leghorns and there were some very fine ones in the lot. To-day his son has not only the buildings his father put up, but every other building on the farm, besides innumerable colony houses, filled with Rhode Island Reds. There must have been a thousand or more of them and they were actually red, not buff. It was a healthy bunch of well-bred birds of a breed that is being thoroughly appreciated as a business fowl. Although Mr. De Groat has a really fine strain of White Leghorns, he expects to give them up and keep Reds only in the future. "The money is in the Reds" is the way he puts it. He sells all his culls to a very convenient and profitable market, at an early age, and has orders for months to come for stock and eggs. The old original strain has been kept line-bred and the result is a uniform lot of birds to select from. We believe Mr. De Groat is on the right track in adhering firmly to the deep red color of the males and the even red bloom minus the shafting, on the females. A Red should be what its name implies, viz., red in color; i. e., as near as the shade can be called red in a fowl. It is true that in some of these strong and deep-colored birds occasionally a tendency toward a little slate under-color appears, but this is unseen on the surface and while a trifling defect in a show bird is often met with in a good breeder. There are other breeders of Rhode Island Reds in this section that keep Mr. De Groat on the anxious seat when show-time comes around, but they breed on a similar scale and get plenty of satisfaction out of the breed and help make the competition keen at the fall and winter shows in this part of the Empire State. At the coming Madison Square Garden Show, New York, will have a big string of Reds entered and New England breeders can rest assured that they will have plenty of competition in the Red alley.

We are pleased to call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in this issue of the paper of the Diffenderffer Lofts and Bantam Yards. These people have always had a fashion of having the best of everything. All interested in Pigmy Pouters or Bantams should write to them for information.

BROWN'S BUDGET

Are you getting your surplus cockerels and old hens in good condition for Thanksgiving and Christmas?

"Twisted or puckered comb" disqualifies Buckeyes. "Puckered" is a new term for twisted. A pea comb, "small' at that, has got to do a contortion act, it would seem, to reach the disqualifying limit.

It's a real satisfaction to read a complete list of awards of such a show as Hagerstown. It's real news, too, and quite different from the mere giving of "awards won by our advertisers."

The poultry shows in the Southern States are becoming numerous. The quality of the specimens shown averages with those exhibited in any part of the country. There are many southern breeders who could send their birds to northern shows and stand a good chance of winning highest honors.

A few years ago the Langshans bred in South Carolina were of the highest excellence. The same state has also raised some magnificent Silver-laced Wyandottes. The writer saw at the Augusta Show last winter some splendid White Wyandottes, Buff Leghorns, Barred Plymouth Rocks and Indian Games that were raised in the state, that would hold their own in any competition.

The Columbians are destined to be a very popular breed. They possess great beauty, being the facsimile of the Light Brahmas, minus the leg and toe feathering. They are fine layers, are hardy, active, good foragers, yet at the same time show considerable of the docile nature characteristic of the Brahma.

When the frosts have killed all vegetation there should be some green food substitute furnished to the fowls once a day. Turnips, rutabagas, mangels, cabbage and even small raw potatoes are all relished by the hens.

As an aid to egg-production in early winter, stale bread soaked in cold water (warm water makes it too sticky) is excellent. The best results can be had by soaking only long enough to moisten the bread properly, then squeeze out all surplus moisture; work over with the hands and work in a little dry wheat bran, and feed in troughs or on clean boards.

Fowls do not mind cold weather as much as they do high winds A tight board fence, running east and west, gives a fine wind break on the south side. Lean-to contrivances made with cornstalks can be constructed to serve the same purpose.

Where large numbers of fowls are kept in one house and run judgment must be used in feeding. The morning meal should be placed in several troughs or be well-distributed. When these conditions are observed there is a better chance for all to get their portion. Unless the fod is well scattered some of the hens will get left in the scramble.

"Chickens for sail" was a sign on a bit of box cover nailed on the gate-post of a farmhouse. A smart Alex came along with a natty rig and stopped. The farmer was leaning on the fence smoking a cob pipe. "When do you expect your chickens to sail, eh?" asked the stranger. "Woll," said the farmer after he let out a tremendous whiff of tobacco smoke, "I reckon as ther first man that comes along that's got 'nuff money to raise the wind they'll sail. Reckon you've got more hot air than money." The stranger drove on, just as a big yellow cock flew up on the fence and flapped his wings and crowed.

"Damaged grain good food for poultry," was a sign I saw in the city the other day. Purchasers of such food will soon have damaged poultry. Any food that is cheap at the expense of quality is dear at any price. Sawdust may be fine board, but it would provide only bulk, not nourishment. It is the same with many so-called cheap poultry foods; they may add to the bulk of the food supply but furnish no nutritious elements.

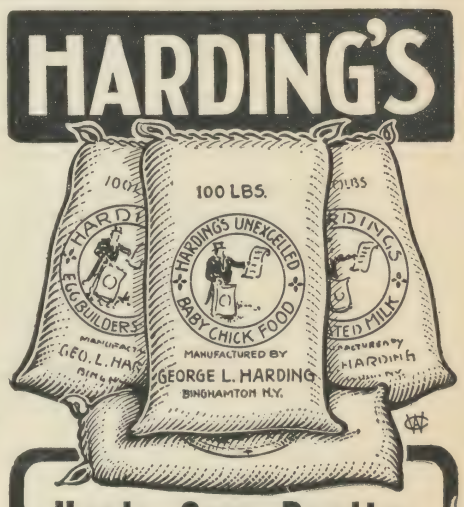
Your editorial note about farmers taking charge of poultry departments at agricultural fairs hits the nail square on the head. Some of the superintendents don't know the different breeds and such a thing as classification is unknown. There are many exhibits (have been) that, if they had been classified would have made good shows. There should also be more uniformity in coops and less sky-scraper style of cooping the exhibits. Every breed in each class should have a sign with letters two inches or more giving the name of the variety.

This information I find in a poultry book published in 1864: "Some hens are accustomed to lay at longer intervals than others. The habit of one variety is to lay once in three days only; others will lay every other day, and some produce an egg daily. The productiveness of hens depends, undoubtedly, upon circumstances to a great degree. Climate has a great influence in this respect, and their lodging and food, as well as the care bestowed upon them, have more or less effect in promoting or obstructing their fecundity." It's the old, old story in different dresses at different periods. Different ideas aiming at the same target.

The same authority gives an idea of what a poultry-house should be, as follows: "No poultry-house is what it ought to be, it may be suggested, in conclusion, unless it is in such a state as to afford a lady, without offending her sense of decent propriety, a respectable shelter on a showery day." Such conditions it would seem would call for strict cleanliness such as even the most fastidious fancier of today aims to follow. And then they tell us sanitary or cleanly methods are new in poultry keeping.

This authority dwells on the importance of "the three grand requisites in a poultry-house are cleanliness, dryness and warmth."

Perhaps the breeders who are producing white or brown eggs for their respective demands can get some consolation if not information from this same ancient authority who says: "Yellow, mahogany and salmon-colored eggs are generally richer than white ones, containing, as they do, a larger quantity of yolk. These are generally preferred for culinary purposes, while the latter, containing an excess of albumen, are preferred for boiling, etc., for the table." This certainly should settle the dispute as to which is the best—white or brown-shelled eggs, and leave those mahogany-colored ones in a class by themselves.



"Now the melancholy days have come." Autumn, with its trying, changing weather, is here. As poultry has no means of changing underwear, like humans, to meet weather conditions, their keepers should endeavor to make conditions to suit the weather changes. Don't overdo the pure-air business at night. The contrasts now between day and night temperature is considerable. Don't make the hens roost in a direct line between east and west windows. Clean houses don't need as much ventilation as filthy ones. You can give plenty of ventilation without a draft in a clean house.

Egg Production Near San Francisco, California

It all depends on the management and food the hens get as to how many eggs they will lay. My flock consists of a pen of Single-combed Brown Leghorns and a pen of Barred Plymouth Rocks and from January 1, 1904, to January 1, 1905, they laid an average of 168 eggs each. There has not been a day during the whole year but that I gathered some eggs. Besides this a number of the hens hatched all the eggs as I had no incubator at that time.

The average price for eggs, according to San Francisco quotations during that year, was 29 1-3 cents per dozen. I arrived at the yearly average by keeping the market report of a Sunday paper for reference every Sunday. I can not tell what it costs to produce these eggs as my growing stock, capons and hens are all fed together and no separate account of the feed bill is kept, but assuming that it costs $1 per year per hen, the profits per hen would be $3.10 per year, not counting the value of the increase in the flock.

From January 1, 1905, to August 1, 1905, my hens laid 2,041 eggs, or an average of 89 eggs per hen in seven months. Ten Leghorns laid 1.003 eggs, ten Plymouth

BUFF ORPINGTON COCK

Rocks laid 815 eggs and three Light Brahmas laid 187 eggs. No doubt everybody would like to own a flock of two hundred egg hens but I am convinced that a flock that averages one hundred and twenty eggs per year yer hen is a money-maker.

I feed equal parts of crushed barley, oats, shorts, bran and cornmeal with ¼ ounce of ground bone per fowl per day in the morning. The oats and crushed barley are soaked over night. In the evening I feed one day wheat, the next cracked corn, the next crushed barley, the next oats, then begin with wheat again. Sometimes when I can get it I use skim milk to mix with the mash. Green food is fed every day during the winter, grass and weeds that grow on the place, and in summer cabbage leaves, radish and turnip tops, etc., which I obtain at the truck gardens for the asking.

That there is money in producing eggs for the market in California there is no doubt. In the city of Petaluma and the surrounding country were produced last year 3,407,344 dozens eggs, and while the producer does not always obtain the high San Franciscan prices for his eggs, yet he makes money, and a friend of mine in Petaluma, who keeps about one thousand five hundred White Leghorns, sells his eggs for twenty cents per dozen all the year around and he has to buy all the feed for his fowls; yet he is able to make money, more than he made while working in an office here in San Francisco. In this climate our fowls only stop laying a little while during the molt, and when they start to lay they are not stopped again by the approach of frost and snow. I well remember how, for days and even weeks, when I lived in New York State, I never saw an egg from my birds. We don't have to shovel snow for half an hour before feeding the fowls in the morning; no snow here, and there is hardly a day in the year but that the sun shines some time during the day even in the rainy season, and there is no frost.—Emil Garnjost.

Incompetent Judging

Since the ball has been started concerning incompetent judging at state and county fairs I want to help keep it rolling until we poultrymen are recognized enough by such societies to give us the best judges in our land. I believe if we people who are fanciers and have this matter down deep in our hearts, will keep at it we can do away with all incompetent judging. It is deceiving both to the exhibitor and to the visiting amateur, and also where awards are published it is very deceiving to subscribers and prospective purchasers.

I had the pleasure this season of visiting a small fair where there was a very good exhibit of Barred Plymouth Rocks. Being always interested in poultry I was very much more so when I saw three of the fair officials take their entry book and start to judge the poultry. There were eight trios of Barred Rocks, three of them being very good specimens, in my estimation. After taking a cane and poking the birds about their cages for possibly five minutes the man carrying the book picked out the very lightest colored trio (the cockerel having feathers all the way down to his toes). He said "any man with an eye for fancy could tell they were far ahead of any others there." The other two agreed and gave them first prize. Then they looked over the names of the other exhibitors and after finding that a lady had entered one trio gave her second, saying that if they did not give her a prize she would not like it. This left the fairly good birds without a prize. Now these are actual facts.

Possibly it is not always so bad, but as a general thing fair officials know nothing about judging poultry. Let every fancier who has any influence whatever with fair officials do his very best to remedy this state of affairs.

Take the Danbury (Conn.) Agricultural Fair as an example. Our officials are up to date. They have in Mr. Fred Borman, one of the best all-around secretaries and superintendents in the world, and they know it. They give him full power to do anything as fanciers like to have it done, and he employs two of the best judges that this country can produce, regardless of cost. This has been brought about by the poultrymen of Danbury, who are wide awake and are working everlastingly for the good of the cause.

Now, brother poultrymen, what we have accomplished you can do. Get together. Wait on your fair officials. Keep constantly at it until they will recognize you and turn the poultry department over to you. Then it rests with you to make a success of it. Cattlemen, horsemen and dogmen are all united. Why not the poultrymen? Get your shoulder to the wheel and push.—Chas. H. Brundage.

Roup

Colds, catarrhal affections and kindred ailments are quite too often mistaken for roup. Fowls are subject to colds and catarrhal troubles, bronchitis and even lung trouble the same as are other animals. No one of these, however, should ever be taken for roup. Roup might well be called blood-poison in poultry. When thoroughly well-established roup is present in your flock, it is so infectious as to permeate the entire system of the fowl, and even though the specimen thus attacked may recover, the condition of the system and the blood will be such that they should neither be used for food nor for breeding purposes.

A fowl with roup has a swelling of the head, gathering in the eyes and nostrils, sometimes a cheesy formation under the skin about the head and throat, cankerous formation in the throat and windpipe and a most nauseating odor from the nostrils of the specimen thus affected.

These are the unmistakable symptoms of roup. Whenever these are present do not hesitate to destroy the specimen and burn the carcass as quickly as possible. Never risk burying it in shallow ground. If they are buried at least four feet beneath the surface it may remove all possible danger of contamination, but where they are but lightly turned under the soil, thrown into a manure heap or cast into an out-of-the-way part of the farm, they are most certain to turn up again as the medium for the great destroyer known as ptomain poisons that produce limber-neck, paralysis and like ailments in poultry, ducks and even human beings, if they happen to be so unfortunate as to eat some of the meat.

While roup is so terrible a thing in itself there is no use of becoming alarmed because your poultry have slight colds or catarrhal troubles, or even bronchitis. These are not roup, they are simply the result of exposure to cold and damp, which may be quickly cured by removing the cause for same. Learn to know the difference between roup and these milder ailments, and never permit a real case of roup to remain about your place longer than it will take to destroy it.

THE AMERICAN PIGEON CLUB BUDGET

Of the recent happenings of interest to members of the A. P. C. some have been agreeable and pleasing while others have been very sad and depressing. Of the latter the most distressing is the sudden death of one of our most popular and valuable members, Henry C. Tieman. I have not been able to get the details of his last illness and death, but have learned that while he was in poor health for some time past, his death was not anticipated until a few days before it came. He was at Hagerstown though he complained of being sick, and said he should be home in bed, but no one dreamed that within a month he would be no more. When the voting for place of meeting and club judge of the Pigmy Club was in progress he sent in his vote, that was but two weeks ago or less, and little did I think it would be his last.

With him dies a knowledge of all varieties of fancy pigeons, second to none, with which we are acquainted. He could and did judge all varieties and did it well. He left a reputation against which there are no black marks. He was a member of a number of specialty clubs and was elected yearly by at least one for its club judge. The fancy is indeed a great, sad loser as well as his legion of friends who knew his worth, and they are anxious to show their appreciation in a memorial in his favor, and as is natural it has taken the form of a cup, one of sterling value and perpetual. But the terms have not been yet considered. I think this must have occurred to a great many on hearing the sad news, but Mr. E. B. Ulrich was the first to suggest and offer a subscription, quickly followed by others and concurred in by all who have learned of the movement. I think it would be well to appoint a committee of members of this club to take the matter up, receive subscriptions, select the piece and arrange the placing and awarding of it each year. Let us hear from every member for this last but everlasting tribute to our departed friend.

Voting slips for election of officers and place of meeting for 1906 have been mailed and the number returned is very gratifying. I am also pleased with the remarks and suggestions which accompany many of the ballots. It shows that the members are thinking and have a deep interest in the club and its affairs. I wish, however, they would think in printers ink occasionally. It would do no end of good to have a discussion now and then in the papers, even on the understanding of the rules as they appear to each one or of hypothetical cases, if one in point does not present itself. This should be done according to the constitution, section four, which says, "The upbuilding, protection and ultimate unification of all pigeon interests in this country."

Does not that mean to get together, talk it over and frame up a method for our protection and advancement? Sure thing! Then why don't you do it?

It seems the New York State Fair was advertised to be and was held under A. P. C. rules, and some members have written for their certificates, and I presume all want them, but I can't see how they can be supplied, as whoever arranged for the use of our rules overlooked the very essential feature of notifying me to supply judges' report blanks, consequently no report was made and I have absolutely no data of the winnings. It is too bad and I hope it will not happen again. Shows wishing to have their pigeon department under A. P. C. rules should notify me in time to supply judges' blanks before the show opens and have them returned to me properly filled out and signed by the judges as soon as possible after the show. It is absolutely necessary that I have this in order to make out the certificate. I am strongly inclined to get up a circular letter to send with the rules to show association secretaries calling their attention to this important feature. It may be worth a trial.—E. C. Duffy, Secretary.

THE FANCY

Losses at Hagerstown

We have a letter from Mr. W. F. Spahr, of Hagerstown, Md., in which he states that he regrets very much to report the death of the little Buff Cochin hen, the property of Miss Hildorfer, of Allegheny, Pa. Mr. Spahr says that we can not understand his feeling on being compelled to make such a report. He also asks that we make the following changes in the awards on White Minorcas:

Ck 1, hens 1, 4, ckl 2, pul 1, Henninger & Shenabrook; cks 2, 5, hen 3, puls 2, 3, pens 1, 2, G. O. Harne; ck 3, F. G. Bean; ck 4, ckl 1, Valdosta Poultry Co.; hen 5, W. A. Smith; hen 2, J. E. Weaver; ckls 3, 4, puls 4, 5, E. P. Eyler.

Mr. Spahr further states that the one other fatality was a Belgian hare, which was dead in its hamper when it arrived. Also that Mr. Verdery, of Augusta, Ga., reports the loss of one of his Silver-laced Wyandotte pullets, and would like whoever has this specimen to return it to him.

Northern Illinois Association

The coming exhibition of the Nothern Illinois Poultry Association, which will be given February 5 to 10 at Belvidere, Ill., will be the biggest and best poultry show ever held by this organization, which has a record of sixteen annual exhibitions behind it, and all of them successful. For judge of the exhibits the local association has succeeded in securing George D. Holden, the famous expert who has been recognized as a leading authority by being elected as president of the American Poultry Association. Bert R. Lucas, who is the corresponding secretary, is receiving inquiries from abroad, and will gladly furnish information regarding the premium list and the plans for the show to all inquirers.

American Plymouth Rock Club

The fifteenth annual meeting of the American Plymouth Rock Club will be held January 3, 1906, at Madison Square Garden, New York. This will be an event extraordinary. Besides the National Club Cup there will be thirty-eight cash specials amounting to $450. These are awarded to members only. The 1905 catalogue is out and is mailed free for four cents in stamps to pay postage. The club with its twelve hundred members is booming things in the Barred Rock line and every breeder should claim membership in it. The membership fee is $1. Write me today please and have your name enrolled now and be elected at the New York meeting.—H. P. Schwab, Secretary, Rochester, N. Y.

West Brookfield Poultry Association

The West Brookfield Poultry Association will hold its third annual show at West Brookfield, Mass., December 21 to 22, 1905. This will be a score-card show and Mr. Daniel J. Lambert, of Apponaug, R. I., will place the awards.

Liberal cash prizes on all varieties of poultry are offered, also silver cups and other special prizes, with ribbons to all prize winners.

With the success of the last show a pleasant memory in the minds of the exhibitors there is every reason to expect that the coming show will surpass all previous efforts. Premium lists will be mailed about the first of December. Write to the secretary for one.—E. L. Richardson, Secretary.

The Diamond State Poultry and Pet Stock Association was organized in Wilmington October 12, 1905, and is going to give a show January 9 to 13, 1906, in Turn Hall, Wilmington, Del. This is the first organization of the kind for Delaware, and it will be the first poultry show for Wilmington. The prospects are very bright for a successful show.—Courtland Rice, Secretary.

Additional Special

A $25 silver cup is offered at the Providence Show of the Rhode Island Poultry Show for the best collection of Fantails, all colors competing.—W. I. Brown, Secretary.

The New '06 Standard Prairie State

The improvements we have added to the Prairie State Incubator for 1906 are world-beaters. They have simply put the Prairie State in a class by itself. When we say we now have an incubator that will bring out every possible hatchable chick with less attention and less liability to disappointment than any other, we mean every word and can prove it with the machine. There are reasons for this—nine of them.

NINE NEW FEATURES

Here they are: 1. The self-evener or automatic gravity heat distributor. 2. Self-adjusting or compensating thermostatic, automatic heat regulator, three times as sensitive as the old regulator. 3. Automatic ventilation. 4. Automatic moisture supply. 5. Large air space above and below eggs. 6. Removable bottoms, making easy to clean. 7. Egg trays contain any size of eggs, hen, duck or bantam, without change. 8. Large incubators have chick drawers. 9. The system of heating that gives the highest per cent of hatches. We cannot go into details in this small space and explain why these features overcome all mistakes, ignorance of operation and neglect, but they do, and you will be interested to know how it is accomplished. Send for the New Standard Prairie State circular. It plainly illustrates and describes every detail. You will be surprised at the practical simplicity of these new ideas which make it possible for the inexperienced to operate it as successfully as the expert.

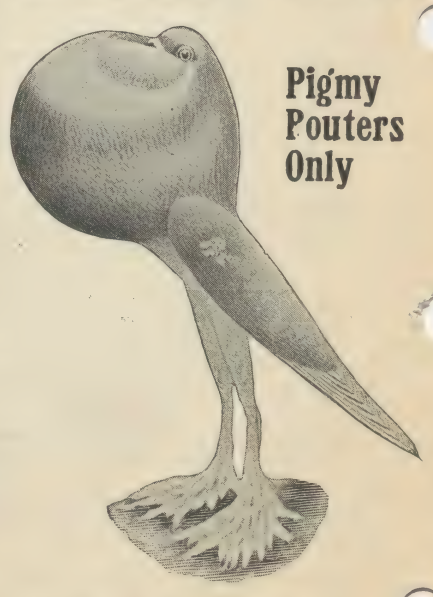
Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts



At the Great Hagerstown Show, the Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts, on twenty-four entries, was awarded 10 firsts (out of a possible 11 firsts), 5 seconds, 2 thirds, 3 fourths, 3 fifths, and special for best bird in show.

All Bred in Line from the Finest American and English Winners

Among the Pigmy Pouters are some imported specimens and their young, all of which are most valuable breeding stock. Have them in all colors.

To clear my lofts of some superfluous stock, will dispose of a few valuable birds at less than one-half their value. Shall be glad to have either Edward S. Schmid or Joseph Baldroff select from my stock for any purchaser.

The quality is here. The opportunity for such purchase does not often present itself.

Another New Prairie State Improvement

The Fresh Air Incubator

Fresh air is absolutely essential to success in the rearing of strong, vigorous birds, as proven by the open front poultry house, so popular among progressive poultrymen. It's just as essential in the hatching of healthy, robust chicks. To properly supply fresh air to the germinating egg has been the problem in artificial incubation for years—the lack of sufficient fresh air the cause of the failure of so many incubators to make good. We call our STANDARD PRAIRIE STATE INCUBATOR the "FRESH AIR INCUBATOR," because in it we have actually solved the fresh air question, and are raising the healthiest, hardiest, brightest-eyed chicks you ever saw hatched by machinery. Our new FREE STANDARD PRAIRIE STATE INCUBATOR catalog explains how we do it—tells all about the open bottom—why it's better. Write today—read reasons.

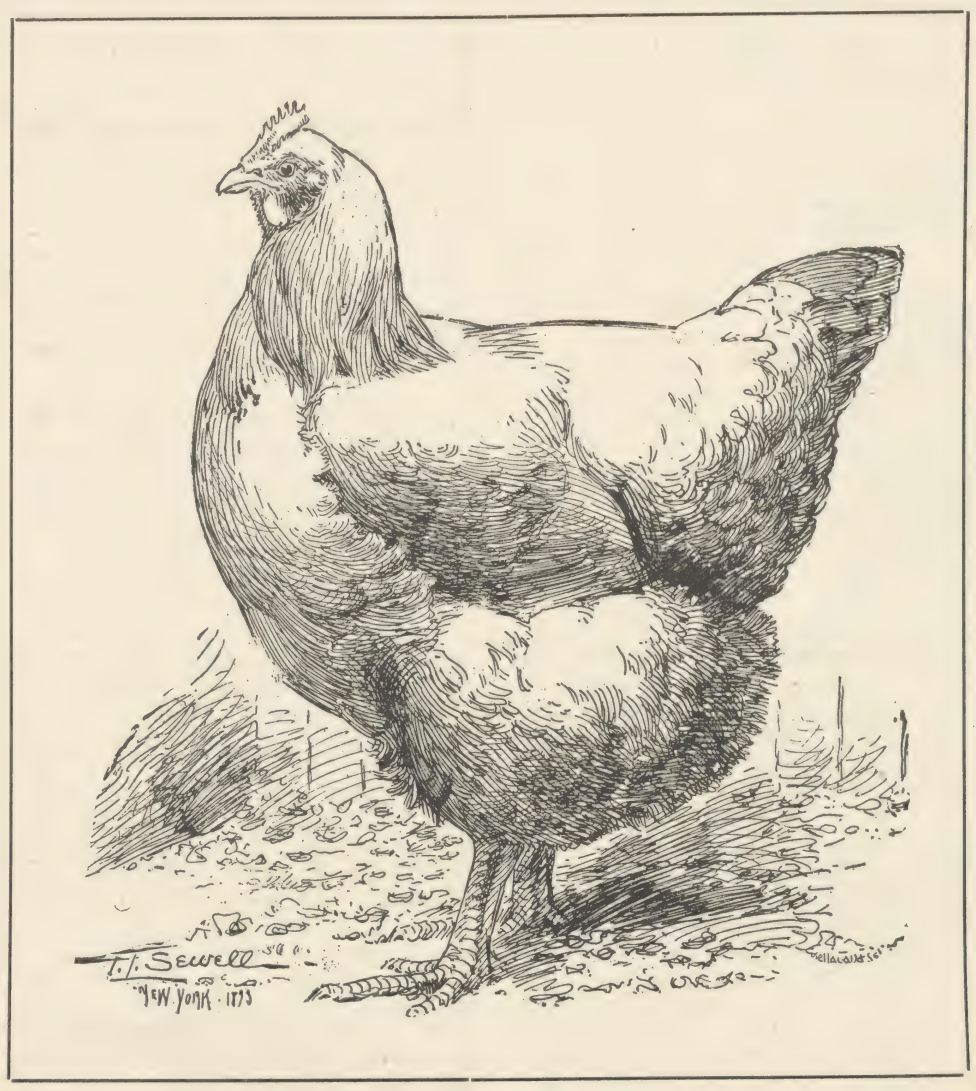
PRACTICAL POINTERS

Many practical men in large concerns are not practical in small things. They study the business part of poultry raising but seldom stop to think of the value of the droppings. They seem a waste and a refuse. The rag-picker accumulates wealth by dealing in things supposed to be worthless by many. He picks up what has been thrown away and markets it at a clear profit.

If the character of the rag-picker was emulated by the poultrymen of this country the industry would be more valuable than it is. Fortunes are wasted all over the country where fowls are kept by simply neglecting to gather up and take care of the droppings under the roosts. And this waste goes on because so many have no idea of the value of the fertilizer thus blown to the winds or left where it fell, year after year, instead of being utilized to start the crops which need forcing with just the elements which hen manure contains.

Many farmers consider it impossible to get through a season without a few bags of guano, or what passes for its equivalent, who keep fowls enough to make more than they purchase, of a better quality than the marketable article, but which is never used and never appreciated because so near at hand and inexpensive.

Droppings should be gathered regularly at least once a week, mixed in dry earth or road dust, and placed in barrels until used. The dry earth will preserve the value of the droppings and absorb the ammonia, thus keeping them in a state of preservation until used. Gather the droppings often, if for no other purpose than cleanliness, pack them away until used, and give credit on the chicken's side of the ledger for their value and you will be surprised at the increased gains in poultry raising for profit. If this plan is adopted, besides the value of the manure, the house will be always kept clean and attractive. This amounts to something too.



THE BEST SOIL

Poultry thrives best on light sandy soils. The reason is that the rains carry off the filth by leaching it down below the surface, scattering it and lessening its effects. On heavy clay soils, where the surface becomes hard in dry weather and sticky after rain, the filth is first mingled with the top soil during the rain and then hardened with it as soon as it dries. Being in the soil and near the surface the heat from the sun causes decomposition, which in turn invites disease. Cholera and gapes are the results of the accumulated filth; disease arising at a time when least expected. Such yards can not be kept clean unless the top soil is occasionally removed, or turned under with a spade, which is a very laborious undertaking when there are large flocks kept. The poorest, lightest, white sand, which has only a sandy subsoil, is the best for fowls.

There is one objection to light, sandy soils, however, that is the absence of grass. Every kind of soil possesses some advantages as well as disadvantages. Clay soils, although retentive of filth, permit of the growth of plenty of grass, but a grass plot is quickly destroyed unless there are changeable yards, the birds being kept in one while grass is growing in the other, and then alternated from the pastured plot to the one in grass, which allows the turning under of the soil and reseeding it.

But while the sandy soils may not be adapted to grass, yet quite an amount of green food can be grown thereon, such as oats, rye, young millet, kale, radish, mustard, etc. Such crops come quickly, as it is not necessary that they be matured. If only a few inches high, they serve the purpose better than when fully ripe, and as the fowls are constantly enriching the soil they virtually assist in growing their own green food, while the cultivaton of the soil purifies it and prevents disease.

Cleanliness is the prime factor for success during the hot weather with poultry, and we know that is the very hardest time of all to clean up; but those who did so are now reaping their reward.

WHITE PLYMOUTH ROCK

The Coming Show Season

There are more dates claimed for poultry exhibitions the coming winter than has ever been known in the history of standard-bred poultry shows in this country. The demand for judges, exhibition coops, and space were never so large. This is most encouraging for the future of the fancy, which should be fostered with the greatest of care. Nothing should be permitted to occur that might injure the pleasant and profitable culmination of the show season.

There are a few features connected with the poultry exhibition business that should be modified. Poultry publications are expected to make known throughout the entire country when and where poultry exhibitions will be held. This is a duty, and a pleasure as well, for the publishers. In connection with this, there is an obligation due from the secretaries of the associations to the poultry publications that should not be overlooked, and that is reciprocity. In other words, the secretaries should willingly do as much in return for the publications as they are willing to do for the associations.

There will be many new exhibitors in the field this winter; there will be many new judges at work. The management of a poultry association, the judges and the older exhibitors should do everything in their power to assist the amateur to a better understanding of the business, and to encourage them to become true, loyal, constant fanciers in upbuilding the general interest. If every one interested in the enterprise would put a willing shoulder to the wheel and do his part, another year will find an increased number of exhibitors and more poultry shows than ever before.

Nothing is so beneficial to the poultry interest as local poultry shows. The more of these that are held, the better for us all. These are the primary departments of the high school in poultry culture. Some of the most successful exhibitors in the largest winter shows come from the successful ones in the rural localities. The greater part of all the winners in the great poultry-exhibition centers of this country are bred in outlying districts. Often the quality is overlooked through inexperience. Such fanciers always become successful exhibitors.

More about Judging

Editor of The American Fancier:

Regarding your article in the issue of November 4, on page 6, in reference to judging at county fairs, please allow me to add a little word of testimony.

At the recent show held at York, Pa., October 3, 4, 5 and 6, Mr. G. O. Brown was the judge, and as that gentleman is well known to you it is needless to comment on his work except to praise it. The managers, however, advertised most positively that entries would close a week before and must be on hand by sundown October 2; yet Mr. Brown was compelled to wait for birds to be housed, Tuesday, October 3, before beginning his work. A whole tentful was placed in position after Tuesday morning.

There were a sufficient number of entries to have kept two judges quite busy, nothing was classed, the exhibitors were compelled to go through crowded aisles to get their exhibits before the judge, which at times was impossible, and the judge was compelled to pass them. It required three days to do the work as it was done. It was my opinion before that time that Mr. Brown was in a measure quite used up, and I would not have blamed him in the least were he unable to tell a black bird from a white one.

The majority of exhibits were in private exhibition coops scattered everywhere, some in the aisles, many in a tent, and a few in the open field. When the birds were judged they were replaced in their cages. No cards were put up and the exhibitors were not able to ascertain the shape of the bird which beat him, while very few of the visitors were able to ascertain anything at all about it.—B. B. Jones.

Egg-laying Contest

In the egg-laying contest at the Kansas Experimental Station, Single-combed White Leghorns have the lead. They range as follows: Single-combed White Leghorns, first; Rose-combed White Leghorns, second; Rhode Island Reds, third; White Wyandottes, fourth; Buff Wyandottes, fifth; Barred Plymouth Rocks, sixth; Light Brahmas seventh.

Editorial Gossip

The advancement of poultry culture rests with the people of any state, provided they have the strength and determination of organization. Within a few weeks a state organization has been completed in Connecticut. Almost every state in the Union held an annual midwinter meeting of from three to four days. The outcome of the poultry organization in the state of Connecticut has brought them the consideration of the state organization to the extent that one-third of the time of the state meeting, which will be held in Willamantic, December 12, 13 and 14, will be devoted to poultry. Mr. C. K. Gresham has been elected president of the state organization.

In writing of White Wyandottes at the recent New York Show, our correspondent states that they were next in number to Orpingtons, but the most hotly contended class in the show. The winners and others are spoken of most highly in this report. What we have seen of White Wyandottes this season prompts us to expect a wonderful display at the coming winter shows.

We received a letter some time ago, asking us what we knew about the Swiss curd. Since answering that question, we imagine that the writer must have been seeking information about Swiss chard, which is a product much like beets or other raw products that has been recommended very highly of late to be grown for poultry. We are not fully satisfied whether calling attention to it is for the benefit of poultrymen or the seed dealers throughout the country, who are willing and ready to furnish the seed of this product to all who make inquiries.

A determined effort is being made on the part of the American Buff Cochin Club to bring into greater prominence the beautiful Buff Cochins. This club is offering a lot of medals, cups and cash specials to be competed for at the coming Chicago Show. For years Boston has been the main stamping ground of the Cochin fowl. There seems to be a determined effort to carry this popular fowl further west.

We wish to congratulate Mr. Phil Feil, of Ohio, on the fact that he has been selected to judge the coming show at Canal Dover, Ohio. This gentleman is one of the advance guard along the lines of more faithful work in the placing of awards. We trust that he will set the example for his associate judges in the state, and that the outcome will be quite satisfactory to the judge himself.

Mr. Isaac K. Felch, of Natick, Mass., has just returned home from being treated in the hospital. He informs us that he feels very much better. At the recent Hagerstown meeting there was brought up the question of a copyright book that was considered an infringement on the American Standard of Perfection. It was also stated in the meeting at Hagerstown that Mr. Felch was no longer a member of the American Poultry Association. We think that a careful examination of the records will show that the meeting at Rochester declined to accept Mr. Felch's resignation and gave him a vote of confidence. We are also in a position to state that Mr. Felch had nothing whatever to do with the issuing of the book in question, as it seems to be a reprint from his book, "Poultry Culture," that passed from his hands some time ago, and has been rejuvenated and issued by the Chicago firm without the consent of or even communication with Mr. Felch.

The Cleveland Fanciers' Club seem determined to put up a good show the coming winter. Cleveland has not been fortunate of late years in handling their poultry shows. The present organization think that they will do much better in the future. We trust they may, for we believe that Ohio should have a show at Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati, all three of which would be an ornament and a credit to the state and the organization. The Ohio fanciers, however, should sit down upon any inclination for the encouragement of conflicting dates, as they seem to have a corner on the American Poultry Association meetings, and providing the head officers of the association. This must carry with it a great responsibility.

The Prairie State Incubator Company won high honors at the International in London. The Cyphers Incubator Company did equally as well at the Crystal Palace Show, held the same week as the International, and we are just informed that the Cornell Incubator Company was awarded a gold medal at the recent Lewis and Clark Exposition. The country is to be congratulated that three such prosperous and active organizations can span the world and win prizes of international value in all sections. It is astonishing the demand that has sprung up in foreign countries for American-made hatching machines. All that is needed to make them supplant all other kinds is to keep up the quality and make them better. No hatching machines have ever been as successful as those made in this country in recent years.

The premium lists for the great winter shows of the United States are ready for delivery. First comes the Madison Square Garden Show during the week of January 2—H. V. Crawford, secretary, Montclair, N. J.; then the Boston Show during the week of January 15—Samuel H. Roberts, of South Attleboro, Mass., secretary; the Cincinnati Show, and the meeting of the American Poultry Association at Cincinnati during the week of January 15—Thomas T. Fay, secretary; the Chicago Fanciers' Association during the week of January 23—Fred L. Kimmey, Dearborn Avenue, Chicago, secretary.

The packing of cooked or dressed poultry in cans and glass is being more extensively carried on each year. In the December issue of The Feather is a most exhaustive account of preparing and finishing poultry for market, including turkeys and water-fowls. In addition to this, the self-feeding process of poultry growing, the newest and most surprising method known is presented and illustrated. Every one interested in poultry throughout the United States should be familiar with these plans and methods of growing poultry and producing market eggs.

"London, November 25, 1905.

"It may seem strange that the Briton's breakfast table should be directly affected by the agrarian troubles in Russia, but such is the fact. The daily breakfast of the average Briton is bacon and eggs. Some hundred million of these breakfast eggs come annually from Russia, but the supply has now dropped. There are no peasants to collect the eggs, no carriers to take them to the stations, and no trains to convey them to ships.

"It is now suggested that China may take Russia's place as the egg provider for Great Britain. A furrier, who was one of the last to escape from Port Arthur before the siege, brought with him a consignment of Chinese eggs to London. His friends here appreciated them and asked for more. A firm secured another consignment from China, which proved a success, and now has the eggs preserved by a secret process, which, it is claimed, keeps them good for a year."

We have known for many years that a large portion of the fresh-laid eggs from Russia went from Berlin to London. We are also familiar with the fact that several attempts have been made to supply these same markets from China. China produces a wonderful lot of eggs. Their poultry are not selected and separated as they should be. If once the Chinese become thorough poultrymen, they will be in a position to supply thousands of crates of eggs throughout the European countries; but, first of all, the Chinaman must learn to separate the males from the females, or it will be impossible for him to ship his eggs any great distance, the necessity of transportation being through very warm countries, often in the holds of ships that are much warmer than outside. This heated condition starts the blood rings and destroys the value of the eggs for other than commercial purposes.

We made note in a recent issue of our paper that Darling & Company, of Chicago, had a branch in New York. We have just received a beautiful catalogue issued by them for their new poultry food and supply house at Long Island City, N. Y. Every one interested in these matters should have one of these catalogues. We would call especial attention to the complete list of books found in this catalogue. All interested in poultry affairs can find something in this line that will add to their knowledge of poultry culture.

Mr. Andrew Riddell, of Shushan, N. Y., the world-wide famous producer of Buff Wyandottes, made a great winning at the New York Show—first cock, second and third hens; second, third and fourth cockerels; second and fourth pullets, and first pen. The majority of these were bred from the cockerel that won the first and the $100 cup last winter at Boston.

The secretary of the White Plymouth Rock Club is working hard for a large display of these beautiful birds the coming winter. All interested in club specials or in becoming a member of the club should send a postal card stating their wish to Seth W. Gregory, Delavan, Wis.

We have just received from the Rex Company, Omaha, Nebr., a copy of their Veterinary Guide. From the appearance of the book and the photographs of the twenty contributors we should imagine that it would be a most valuable book in the hands of all. It would be to your advantage to write direct to the Rex Company for one of the books.

It is to be lamented that New York and Chicago are determined to pass through the same sweat-box of holding two poultry shows in the same city. London, worse than this, had two in the same week. Perhaps the recent experience in some of these cities will teach not only these a lesson, but may prove to be an object-lesson with a get-together clause in it that may benefit the fancy all over the world.

We notice by a recent issue of Pigeon News that the Pigmy Pouter Club will hold their annual meeting at Boston, and that Mr. A. D. Brown, of Washington, will act as judge. Boston has always been a very attractive point for the meeting of the largest pigeon clubs, and we imagine Mr Brown will have his hands full in handling the classes.

We imagine the poor hens will feel more than grateful that winter is at hand, and that tampering with nature has ceased along the lines of forcing a molt. We are a little surprised to find a method so old and threadbare presented as a new feature with double headlines in the Sunday issue of the New York Herald, but every one can not know that if poultry are forced to molt in midsummer, they are absolutely certain to molt the second time before the winter sets in, and winter eggs are at a premium.

While the official report does not give credit to any individual specimens, Messrs. Beecher & Beecher claim that one of their hens holds the highest record of one hundred and ninety eggs produced during the year.

The Gloversville Show was the first held in the famous Glove City since 1892. It proved a success while the old and forgotten one was a financial failure, which cost some of the management quite a few pennies. Being a combination dog and poultry show it went principally to the dogs. We remember this show well and the crowd of old-timers that attended it, such as E. B. Thompson, Frank W. Gaylor, A. A. Parker and others. The show just closed was purely poultry and pigeons and another generation of poultrymen were the exhibitors.

The interest in poultry has taken decided leaps in Gloversville and Johnstown in the last few years, and an annual show in either of these cities in the future is an assured fact. The quality of the stock raised is, of course, of the best and the fact that most standard varieties are now being bred in this section will make local exhibits interesting and instructive. There is a decided boom in the Barred Rocks noticeable and the rivalry is becoming quite intense among the breeders. This good, old American breed is in no danger of losing ground in Fulton County.

Rhode Island Reds have also taken a strong hold on the fanciers in northern New York, the class of birds at Gloversville being of the very finest quality. The breed seems to do well in this climate and now that it is being bred to more uniform color is beginning to interest the real fancier more than in the past.

White Leghorns is another one of the breeds that is intensely popular in this neck of the woods, the quality of the birds at Gloversville being far above the average. Brown Leghorns seem to be trailing behind somewhat. Years ago they were numerous and good in this section.

The Game exhibit by Mr. John Blunck was a treat to look at, especially his Silver Duckwings. The latter made the finest showing in point of quality and number we have seen at a poultry show in a great many years, and deservedly won the silver tea set for the best collection of any variety in the show.

In the Game Bantam alley the feature was the Black Game pullet, the finest stationed and shaped bird of its kind we ever saw, in fact, the opinion among Game fanciers was that she was the best-shaped Game in the show. Yet there are some Game breeders that claim Black Game Bantams can not be bred to as high a station or good a type as the other varieties. The trouble with some of the Black Game Bantams seen at most shows is that they are not Games at all.

Judge F. B. Zimmer entertained a party of fanciers at his home in Gloversville, and furnished them a treat in the shape of a venison dinner. "Zim" was lucky enough on a recent hunting trip to secure two fine deer, and, as he says, "There is nothing too good for chicken men." "Gus" Braun, of Syracuse, N. Y., broke all records in the eating line and says he will come again next year when the leaves begin to fall and venison is plentiful at Debonair. Judge W. J. Stanton, of New York City, was a close second to Braun, we are informed. He always did like deer and may put in some on his preserve at Ridgedale, N. J., next year.

An Albany delegation composed of Doctor Hurdis, C. E. Rockenstyre and F. D. Ford spent one day at the Gloversville Show and enjoyed the birds and visit. They informed us that the Albany Fanciers' Association will hold its second annual exhibition in the State Armory, Albany, N. Y., under the auspices of the Second Battalion, on January 10, 11, 12 and 13, 1906. The officers are: S. R. Davenport, president; D. H. Liper, vice-president; A. F. Hill, secretary; W. C. Jordan, assistant secretary; Dr. J. Hurdis, treasurer; N. D. Ford, superintendent; M. C. Keeler, assistant superintendent. The premium list will be ready December 14. This show will be probably cooped by the Empire Cooping Company. Single tiers will rule, as the floor space is unusually large and the accommodations for a very large exhibit are of the best. The Armory is well-located on the principal thoroughfare of Albany and the indications are that the exhibition will prove an unqualified success. The judges so far engaged are C. E. Rockenstyre and John D. Jacquins.

The artist, A. O. Schilling, was at Gloversville taking photographs of birds and men in the interest of White's Class Advertising, Chicago. Mr. Schilling also had a fine exhibit of Buff Cochin Bantams at the show. He informs us that his brother expects to go into the poultry business on quite an extensive scale next season. He will handle White and Buff Wyandottes and Cochin Bantams.

The secretary of the Cleveland (Ohio) Show writes that the indications point to the largest show ever held in the state, and that one of the features will be the judging, every class being handled by two jurors, and if they disagree a third will be called to place the award. Personally we are of the opinion that one man is enough to place the award in any class.

The Twenty-first Annual Nebraska State Association's Exhibition will be held at the State University Armory, Lincoln, Nebr., January 15 to 20, 1906. The judges selected are: W. S. Russel, W. C. Ellison, Thos. W. Southard and David Larson. Luther P. Ludden, of Lincoln, is the secretary.

The premium list of the Madison Square Garden Show, New York, has been mailed to intending exhibitors by the secretary, H. V. Crawford, Montclair, N. J. Those who have not received a copy should send to Mr. Crawford at once as entries close positively on December 15. The regular prizes and entries are the same as last year, but the classification is more liberal and includes 473 classes in poultry, turkeys and geese, in fact, it is the most liberal classification we have yet seen. There is a long list of specials including silver cups, cash and club specials, the Barred Plymouth Rock Club list being especially formidable and full of good things. Seventeen specialty clubs hold metings during the week of the show and the attendance of fanciers and the number of entries promises to exceed all past records.

The opening session of the annual meeting of the American Poultry Association will be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, on January 18, 1906. We notice that petitions for the admission of the following new varieties to the Standard of Perfection have been received: Rose-combed Rhode Island Reds, Rose-combed Buff Orpingtons, Black Orpingtons, Rose-combed Black Orpingtons, White Orpingtons, Rose-combed White Orpingtons, Diamond Jubilee Orpingtons, both single and rose-combed; Spangled Orpingtons, both single and rose-combed, and Rose-combed Buff Leghorns. This is quite a formidable list of candidates and may cause much debate and possibly disturbance when they come up for discussion. The Orpington family is unusually prolific and far from being race suicidal, but the rule governing the admission of new breeds to the Standard is liable to reduce the number in Orpington claimants as some varieties have not been exhibited at A. P. A. shows if the latter term is permissible. The Single-combed Blacks and Single-combed Whites, we believe, have been shown at three A. P. A. shows and possibly the Rose-combed Buffs, but the others are not as well known outside of the vicinity of New York, and we doubt whether they have been exhibited to any extent outside of this section of the country.

There should be no trouble regarding Rose-combed Buff Leghorns as they have been in the show-rooms for many years and breed just as good and true as the Single-combed variety. As to the Rhode Island Reds, it would, perhaps, be best not to prophesy anything that may happen to them at Cincinnati. It appears that the old feud existing between the American Red and Rose-combed Rhode Island Red factions is not a thing of the past, and we are afraid some old sores will be reopened and much good temper spoiled when the clans meet.

The great display of the Prairie State machines seemed to have been at the Alexandria Palace Show. Apparently, there were two large shows in or near London during the same week of November 7; one, the Crystal Palace; the other, the International. There seems to be a great demand for American hatching machinery abroad. We had the pleasure the other day of thoroughly examining the new line of Prairie State incubators, and pronounced them most satisfactory and attractive.

BROWN'S BUDGET

Whether it is best to start with eggs or fowls depends on several things. Of course the main one is the amount one has to invest or start with. Unless able to pay for a pen of first-class fowls, perhaps it would be as well to buy a couple of "settings" of eggs from good stock to make the start. One advantage in buying the fowls is that a start can be made at any time.

When feeding the flock it is a good opportunity to note any specimen that may be "off its feed," as the saying is. At once try to determine what the ailment is. Nipping trouble in the early bud is always the best.

Women are coming rapidly to the front as writers on poultry. Why shouldn't they? They almost invariably make poultry raising a marked success. Their chatty and spicy way of dishing up poultry items is characteristic and interesting.

California is becoming noted for its poultry products. The Poultry Journal gives the exact number of poultry and eggs received in Petaluma in six consecutive days as 37,692 eggs and 1,344 dozen poultry.

"Rose-combed Anconas" have been exhibited in the English poultry shows. Some breeders over there are calling for a regular class for them in the shows. What next?

Denmark is looming up as a great egg-producing country. What may be accomplished by system and combination is shown from the following facts: In 1895 a company for the export of eggs was formed. In 1896 the value of eggs exported was $2,000,000 and in 1902 there was exported thirty-six million dozens, valued at $6,000,000. The Danish company now has thirty-five thousand five hundred members, all under the direction of a central office. Each local branch collects the fresh eggs in its district and ships to a certain export port; all expenses, after eggs leave collecting districts are defrayed by the company, which also guarantees to purchasers the freshness of the eggs.

The sudden development of canker among a flock of healthy, well-kept fowls, during late fall and early winter is often a source of mystery. When there are no apparent causes or conditions to induce canker it comes just the same, even when the premises are kept strictly clean every day. No crowding of stock, no chance for drafts and a well-varied diet provided, cases of canker will sometimes appear. Some authorities declare it is caused by feeding too much grain, which causes "the blood to become too rich and feverish." Why should this cause canker? Many remedies are recommended, but if the affected fowl has reached the stage of very difficult breathing it should be killed and burned or buried deep enough so there will never be any danger of its carcass reaching the surface again.

How the hens enjoy the southern exposed hillside slopes on a windy day. Among the frost-killed herbage they appear to find enjoyable picking, too.

The opening of the shooting season and on Thanksgiving Day farmers near large cities have to keep their poultry in close quarters. Some city men do not have either conscientious scruples or seem to know that domestic poultry are not wild fowls.

The encouraging success often secured with small flocks occasionally induces people to greatly increase the numbers. They expect proportionate results, but fail to realize them. Why? The main reason is because the same conditions and accommodations the smaller flock enjoyed are not provided.

Intelligent fanciers may keep almost any breed and truly consider it the best. Care and surroundings enjoyed by a flock induces results that bring profit. There is not as much difference in breeds of poultry as there is in men. Love of occupation is credited with being half the factor in success in any calling. Cold dollars and cents alone don't count for as much in poultry keeping as a fancy for a certain breed, backed up by a love for the occupation.

Encourage the boy who shows a disposition to be kind to pets. Buy him a trio of Bantams or large fowls, and note how ownership will help make a little man of him, and how it will help to develop business ideas.

Now that vegetation is killed fowls will hang around their houses waiting, like Oliver Twist, for "more." It is important that the hens should work now more than when they were roaming around. Exercise is essential to the health of the flock. A good pile of clean, dry leaves is a real health resort for the hens, especially if there is something among the leaves that induces them to scratch. Their cheery song of content while working will remind you of the whistling of the contented farm boy choring around with his pockets bulging out with good eating apples. Eating the apples is the only thing that stops his whistling, and finding the grain is all that checks the happy singing hens.

The scratching shed should be considered as indispensable as the poultry house. Note on a cold, raw day the difference between a flock that has a scratching shed and one that has none. One flock will be contentedly working away seemingly not minding the weather; the other will huddle in as protected a place as they can find, and present a veritable picture of misery. Next day compare the egg results and you'll become a convert to the scratching-shed system.

Whitewash kills the lice it submerges. It is more of a disinfectant than a lice killer. Lime wash alone will not exterminate the hen lice and the mites.

THE GLOVERSVILLE SHOW

The first annual exhibition of the Fulton County Poultry and Pet Stock Club was brought to a successful close November 25, at Odd Fellows' Hall, Gloversville, N. Y. About seven hundred entries, aggregating nearly one thousand birds, filled the Empire Coops. The latter were nicely arranged in double tiers, the classification being most excellent. The officers worked untiringly to make the show a success and their efforts were greatly appreciated by visiting fanciers, exhibitors and the public. The only drawback to the complete artistic success of the exhibition was the poor light in the hall, only one side of the building being blessed with daylight. The addition of numerous electric lights on the second day of the show helped to make the exhibits look more bright and interesting.

The judging was done by F. B. Zimmer, who handled the Mediterranean, Asiatic Game and Game Bantam classes, and W. J. Stanton, who took all other classes except the American varieties, the latter being judged by J. H. Drevenstedt. It was strictly a show of quality, such a thing as a real poor bird being conspicuous by its absence.

The American Dominiques led the procession in the cooping and cataloguing and although but few in numbers were far ahead in quality of what is usually seen.

Barred Plymouth Rocks were unusually strong in numbers and very fine in quality. First cock, a grand, big bird of fine type, was intensely and narrowly barred in all sections, the latter blending exceedingly well but was, in color, too dark however; second, a better bird in color, was good in barring and not so good in shape; third, a beauty in color and barring of the right Standard type, but was heavy in molt and not in condition to go higher; will make a mark later on in the best of company. Hens were fine, first being great in shape, good comb and legs, fine in color, evenly barred; second, was another grand bird in barring and nice shape, losing in evenness of color; third and fourth were both good in color and shape. In the cockerel class the first was one of the finest and most evenly-colored and barred birds we have seen this season, good in head and comb, nice legs, but rather raw and undeveloped in shape; the bluish cast in each and every section harmonized nicely. This bird has a future before him unless all present signs fail. The second was a nice, little bird, strong in barring, good in shape and head; third was very even in color and barring good type, but raw and unfinished and needs a month or two to develop thoroughly; the rest of the class was good but not sufficiently matured. Among the pullets the first was a finished product, large, fine shape, sound color and well-barred; second, stronger in barring and a trifle better in color, but too young and undeveloped to win over first; third was a good, even-colored and barred bird; fourth was a beauty in intense and narrow barring, good color, but was not in best of feather and condition, a bit off in legs and shape; the balance of class was good. Pens were a grand lot of nine, first being composed of a trim even-colored and barred cockerel and four as nice barred and colored pullets, with as good legs as we have seen in many a moon; second was another fine bunch of youngsters in color and barring; third was a great pen of old birds, color and barring being uniform; fourth and fifth strictly first class. It was a treat to handle such a class.

White Rocks were few in number but very good in quality, notably first cock, hen, cockerel, pullet and pen; second and third pens being very close up.

Buff Plymouth Rocks were a grand lot but a walkover for the Edgemont Farm. The first cockerel shown by the latter is the best bird in shape and type we have seen this season; in color he is even in surface, sound under, also in wings and tail, good head and comb, looks unbeatable at most shows. All the birds in this class handled nicely, the evenness of color being a noticeable feature.

Silver Wyandottes had small classes, first and second hens and first pullet being above the average in quality; the whole class was good. Golden Wyandottes were a walkover for Mr. Sitterly, who had an even, fine lot of birds.

White Wyandottes did not fill up as big as expected but had plenty of quality. First cock was a big, blocky, white bird, good head and comb; second was another good one, not quite so good in color; third and fourth were a trifle off in color, but fair in type and shape. First hen was grand in shape, very white in plumage, good head and comb; second was another fine one in type, nice, clear-white plumage, good head and legs; the rest were good but failed in color and condition. Among the cockerels the first was a fine, stylish bird of correct type, pure white plumage, good head and comb; others loose in color of plumage, but averaged well in type. In the pullet class the first was a beauty in style and shape, good head and comb, pure white in plumage; second was close up, being fine in shape and color and good in head and comb; the others fail somewhat in color and shape. The three pens shown were good ones, first being very even in females headed by a fine male.

Buff Wyandottes were the warmest and best bunch we have handled this season and we doubt if there ever was a better lot penned at any show. Competition was very keen and a fourth or fifth prize at a show like this is well worth having. In cocks Mr. Piser took first and second with a pair of fine birds, color and shape being very evenly distributed in both, second losing only in legs and toes; third was another good one in shape but not so even in color. First hen was a large, even-colored bird of correct type; second and third were a trifle light in color and not so good in type. First cockerel was large, good in type, buff over and under with solid, buff tail primaries and secondaries; second, a beauty in style, was fine in surface color, losing, however, in main tail feathers being quite black; third, another grand bird in color, was not so well developed; fourth, a beauty in shape, nice head and comb, good surface plumage, but failed in color of tail and secondaries, latter being too much inclined to black; fifth was a twin brother to fourth. Among the pullets the first was ripe and finished, shape excellent, good head, even color; second was not quite ready but even in color on surface and under; should prove a winner at later shows in any company; third was too light in breast color and not even enough in color of other sections, otherwise a very fine bird; fourth and fifth were good enough to win at most shows. There were only two pens, first winning easily, the male and female being nicely matched and very sound in color.

The Hon. Joseph Shull had a walkover in Partridge Wyandottes except in the hen class, where the Hon. E. J. Lorent beat Joe's hen with a rather fine, old dame, color and penciling as well as shape being first-class. Mr. Shull's cock bird is a beauty in color and shape.

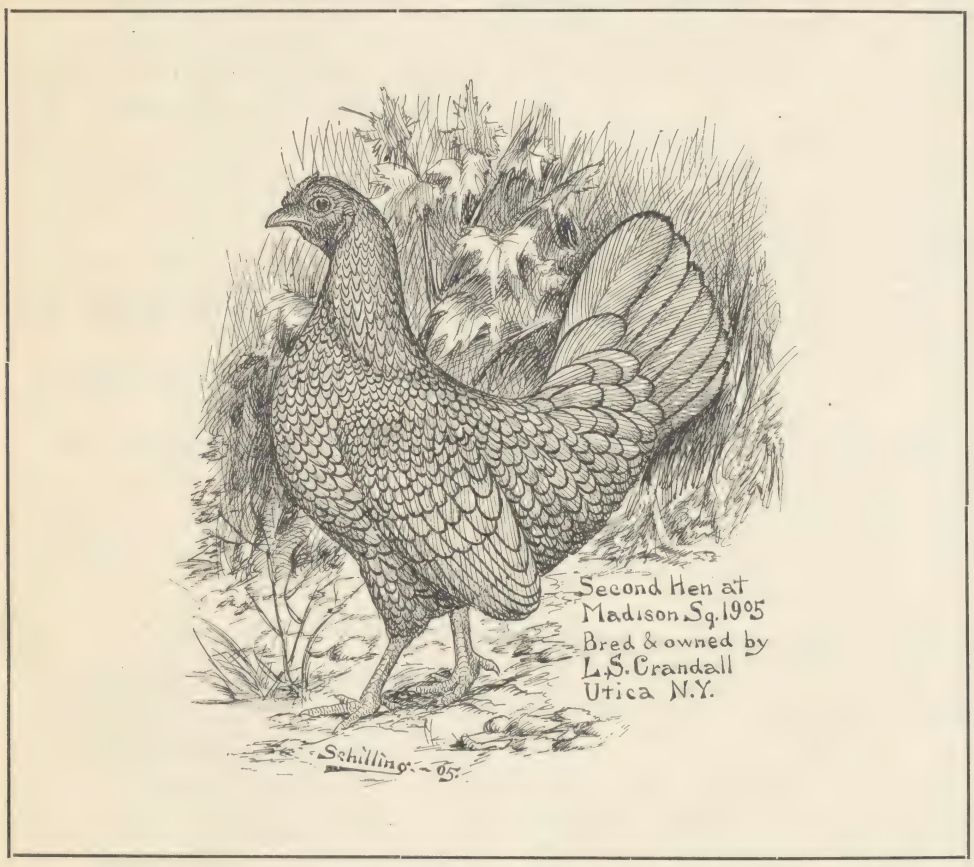
Silver-penciled Wyandottes were few but good. The same applies to Black Wyandottes.

Columbian Wyandottes brought out the best pullet in color we have seen this season. The hackle was as good as seen in the best of Light Brahmas, the feathers meeting at the throat; the tail a coal-black, with beautifully-laced coverts; wings good, primaries being black edged with white. The rest of the class was first-class.

Rhode Island Reds had big classes and the best in quality we have ever handled. Cocks were an even lot, all good in type, color and head-points being principal factors in determining the awards; hens were a fine bunch; first was an old winner, grand in type and sound in color; tained a lot of good ones up to and including third in each division. Rose-combed Browns had a large entry, being a collection of good ones. In Buffs there was a small entry and these were only fair, while in Blacks the quality was good except in cocks, the entry in this variety being also small. There was a nice pair of Rose-combed Buffs shown of better than average quality. In Silver Duckwings there was a good pair. In fact, Duckwings, both Silver and Golden, were of first-class quality.



"In Dominiques there was a good pair. In Black Minorcas the class was good, the winning hen and cock being way above the average in size, shape and color. These will be fit to show when fully finished in any company in America. The same may be said of Whites. Rose-combed Blacks made up a rather small entry, but were excellent in quality. White-faced Blacks were only four in number, but they were very good.

"Red-caps had only two fair birds. Crevecœurs also had only two and they were very good specimens for this rare variety. The Silver-gray Dorking entry consisted of two only, but these were good. The Whites were poor.

"Pit Games had a small entry but all were good. In the Silver Sebright Bantam class some were very good and others were rather creamy in plumage. Goldens only had two entries which were very good. Buff Cochin Bantams made up a nice lot, some of them being winners last week at the Great Eastern Show. The White, Black and Partridge classes were small and so were the Light and Dark Brahmas. Black Rose-combs were a small lot but very good. Whites had only two entries but they were very good also. The Japanese had only a pair each of White- and Black-tails, but were all fine birds. White Polish were very good, also the White-booted and the Silkies. Lakenvelders only had two pairs of birds. Black Orpingtons were represented by four very good birds. Buffs had a nice lot of good birds.

"The entries in turkey, duck and goose classes were small, but what few there were were good. The pigeon class was small, but the most of them were good and could win in good company. The largest classes were the Fantails and Magpies."

Below are the awards:

POLISH

GOLDEN PLAIN: Ck 1, hen 1, August Braunn; ck 2, ckl 1, hen 1, Martin Shoup. GOLDEN-second, very even in color; the rest good enough to show anywhere. Cockerels made up a big class, first being a beauty in size and shape, nice comb and head, very even in color and a winner, every inch of him; second was not quite so good in shape, but a beautiful bird in color and will take a lot of beating later on; the rest of the winners were high-grade with little to choose among them. Pens were strong, first being composed of a very even-colored lot of females, good in type, headed by a fine-colored and shaped male; second pen very close to other in color of females, but not quite so good in male; third, fourth and fifth pens all first-class.

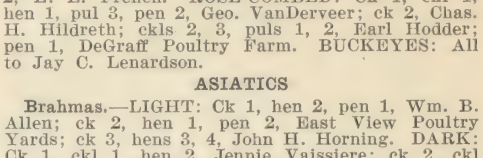
Rose-combed Rhode Island Reds not so numerous as the Single-combed, but very fine in quality. The Buckeyes exhibited were few but good.

Mr. Zimmer writes of his classes as follows:

"White Leghorns were a large class and of a strikingly high-class order, the first cock being a wonder in size and shape. The first cockerel was a 'hummer,' being of good size, style and headgear. There was an extra good one left out for a trifle white in the face. Hens were of a No. 1 quality, while the pullets made up a good class. Rose-combed Whites had a nice entry and were good birds. Brown Leghorns made up a large class and con-



Black Spanish had a small class, but were of good quality. Andalusians did not make a large class, but those shown were of A No. 1 quality. Anconas were also of excellent quality, A No. 1 in fact, and made up a good class. Black Sumatras were small in numbers, but of A No. 1 quality. The class in Brown-red Game Bantams was small but of good quality, while Brown-reds were of A No. 1 quality throughout. Duckwings, both Silver and Golden, were of first-class quality. In Black Game Bantams there was the best pullet we ever handled."

Judge W. J. Stanton's report on his classes is as follows:

"At Gloversville the Golden Polish had entered a good lot of both bearded and plain. Silvers were represented by bearded only, but were a fine lot. The second cock will be a dandy when through his molt, but in too poor feather now to win first. Bearded Whites were a small class and also a poor one. Plain Whites were a nice lot and could win in better company. White-crested Black were also a nice lot. In the Buff-laced there were only five entered, but they were very fine.

"Golden-spangled Hamburgs had entered a fine lot of this very rare variety. The Silvers, excepting the cocks, were also a fine lot. The cocks were very poor specimens. Golden and Silver-penciled had a small entry, but what was there was good.

The incubator business has had a wonderful impetus of late rather unusual to this season of the year. We notice that the Cyphers Incubater Co. had a remarkably fine exhibit at the late Crystal Palace Show. The English papers speak in very complimentary terms of same. Our impression is that this company turned out over seven hundred finished machines during the third week in November.

W. Cook & Sons' special display at the Crystal Palace Show called forth special comment in the English papers. These people are very progressive. On all sides we hear the report that the Great Eastern Show, recently held in New York, had a very poor attendance; yet, in a letter just received, Mr. Cook informs us that he personally sold over $1,500 worth of stock at that show. This everlastingly keeping at it is the secret of the Cook success.

Photographs recently published in the English papers of the Barred Plymouth Rocks leads one to believe that the American and the English type are almost as far apart in this breed as are the English and American type of Cochin fowl, and we are told by those who have visited both countries that the darkest of our males seen in the exhibition pen would be mild in plumage color compared with the English exhibition stock. We notice that both the Prairie State Company and the Cyphers Incubator Company were fortunate in their winnings in the recent London (Eng.) shows. Regularly employed judges passed upon the exhibit of all kinds of appliances at the two great English shows.

THE FANCY

A CHANCE TO COMPARE WINNERS FROM OTHER EXHIBITIONS

The Fanciers' Association of Indiana will hold its sixth annual exhibition in Tomlinson's Hall, Indianapolis, Ind., February 5 to 10, 1906. In addition to poultry we will make special classes for dogs, cats, pet stock and pigeons. The association will pay the following cash prizes: Single entries, first, $3; second, $2; third, $1; fourth, fifty cents. Breeding pens, first, $4; second, $2.50; third, $1.50. In addition to cash prizes we will give an elegant silver cup in all classes where there are ten or more single entries.

The judges selected are the most prominent men in the ring to-day; they have had years of experience and have judged the most important classes at the leading shows in America. They are as follows: James A. Tucker, Concord, Mich.; Geo. Burgott, Lawton Station, N. Y.; Wesley Lanius, Greensburg, Ind.; Ben S. Myers, Crawfordsville, Ind.; W. C. Pierce, Indianapolis, Ind.; O. L. McCord, Danville, Ill.; S. B. Lane, Spiceland, Ind.; Theo. Hewes, Indianapolis, Ind.; C. M. Ryan, Eaton, Ind.

The premium list will be ready for mailing not later than December 1. For further particulars address E. A. Pierce, secretary, or Theo. Hewes, president, Indianapolis, Ind.

WEST SHORE FANCIERS' ASSOCIATION

The West Shore Fanciers' Association will hold its third annual show at Sheboygan, Wis., Thanksgiving week. The show will be conducted in a businesslike manner. Every exhibitor will be accorded every opportunity to show his birds to the best advantage. The associatiton counts itself fortunate in having secured Mr. James A. Tucker, of Concord, Mich., as judge. We feel that our inducements in the form of cash prizes, eight silver cups, and specials are sufficient to warrant any one in making an exhibit with us. Judging will be done Monday and Tuesday; Wednesday prizes awarded. Premium list is now ready. Address Secretary A. H. McIntire for one.

GOLDEN WYANDOTTES

The question is often asked: "Why are not the Golden Wyandottes more popular when they are such grand fowls?" This is easily answered. It is simply because the breed has never been pushed. Unless those who are breeding this variety will unite their forces and try to give the Golden Wyandottes the prominence of which they are worthy, they never will receive their just deserts.

Let me ask, why are the White Wyandottes so popular? There are two reasons. First, they are good fowls and worthy of the attention of poultry breeders; second, back of this variety are two strong clubs. One of these clubs alone has almost twice as many members as any club that is back of any other breed. The results of such an organization have been almost phenomenal.

All the club efforts that could possibly be brought to bear on some breeds could not make them popular, simply because they do not possess desirable qualities. This is not the case, however, with any of the varieties of Wyandottes. Their qualities are such that make them desirable, especially as a general purpose fowl.

The Goldens have appropriately been termed "The Beauty Breed" on account of their beautiful plumage. While they have this beautiful plumage, they also have all the other good qualities that belong to Wyandottes in general and the beauty "thrown in for good measure." Now, fellow breeders, let us unite our forces as we never have before and try to put new life into the club which is young but growing. Send in your name and one dollar as membership fee and try to get other Golden Wyandotte breeders you may know to do likewise.—A. W. Davis, Bigrock, Ill., Secretary.

AMERICAN LEGHORN CLUB MEETING

The twelfth annual meeting of the American Leghorn Club will be held at Madison Square Garden on Friday, January 5, 1906, at 4 p. m., during the New York Show. Good attendance is desired. Some special business to transact.—W. W. Babcock, Secretary and Treasurer, Bath, N. Y.

THE SCRANTON SHOW

Scranton, Pa., November 1.—The representative chicken fanciers of the city met in the parlors of the Y. M. C. A. last evening to perfect arrangements for the poultry show that will be held in Music Hall in January. It was decided to limit the entries to one thousand birds and as a large number of fanciers have already entered those who desire to participate are advised to get in on the ground floor by entering early. The show will be held in Music Hall from January 15 to 20. The birds will be cooped by Spratt's. The judges of the show will be two men of wide reputation, namely, Mr. J. H. Drevenstedt, of Johnstown, N. Y., and Mr. F. B. Zimmer, of Gloversville, N. Y. These men are the foremost chicken fanciers in the country.

PAINESVILLE, OHIO, POULTRY AND PET STOCK ASSOCIATION

The tenth annual exhibition of the Painesville Poultry and Pet Stock Association will be held at Painesville, Ohio, January 10-15, 1906. As has always been the rule this will be a score-card show, Mr. Thomas F. Rigg, one of the best-known poultry experts, will be the judge. Liberal cash premiums are given on all standard varieties. The premium list will be forwarded upon application.—F. G. Johnson, Secretary, Painesville, Ohio.

Martin's White Wyandottes won more prizes than any other exhibitor. First and Third Cockerel, First and Third Pullet, Second Cock, Second Hen and Second Pen. This was a remarkable win, owing to the fact that previous to this show they had been cooped nearly two weeks at the Toronto Show, and thus were not in as good condition as the birds they competed with.

Editorial Gossip

We call the attention of our readers to the proposed changes in the constitution of the American Poultry Association in another portion of this paper. Every poultryman throughout the country, and every member of the association should carefully study these proposed changes and be prepared at the next meeting of the association to cast his vote in a manner that will declare the future policy of the association.

It is possible for the association to take up a line of procedure that will increase its influence in all matters pertaining to poultry, and it is quite as easy for them to so hamper the association with unnecessary obstacles as to make it of less value and of considerable less benefit along the lines for the very purpose for which it was conceived and has been kept alive.

As the association stands to-day it is simply a vendor of standards, a collector of fees for membership, and an inconsiderate spender of public funds to an enormous amount without a return of value received to those that support it. Its own members and members of the revision committee as well are making use of the illustrations and descriptions for filling the columns of their journals, all of which shows a disregard for the claimed rights of the association, and a willingness to use for private purposes that which either does or does not belong to the association under its copyright.

Editor Heck, Successful Poultry Journal, tells us personally through the columns of his paper that we will find more from the Standard on page fifteen of his recent issue, and that more is to be forthcoming in early issues of the same publication. We do not wish to become a court of inquiry and decision over the action of any one. We only point to these conditions as straws which show the way the wind blows, and the wind has so thoroughly blown through the whiskers of the membership of the whole association during the past year or two as to cause them to look quite leaky, to use the parlance of the vaudeville stage.

One can not refrain from complimenting the publishers of Poultry upon their Wyandotte number. It is certainly a tribute of respect to this most valuable addition to the list of American-bred poultry and an example of the enthusiastic push and perseverance of the American fancier for standard-bred quality. There does not seem to be any obstacle too great to be overcome by the American fanciers.

Not being satisfied with the excellence reached in their laying strains of ducks in Australia, another, called the Partridge Duck, has been added to the list. Mr. Noyes, in writing to the editor of The Austalian Hen, states that his Buff Orpington and Runner Ducks have great reputations as layers, but that he has even more confidence in the new production of Partridge Ducks. From appearance, the Partridge Ducks are more than likely the result of a cross of the Rouen, Mallard and Indian Runner Duck. The Australian poultry fanciers have gone wild over the solution of the question of ducks as egg producers. The climate there seems to be more healthful for ducks than chickens, and for this reason unusual effort has been put forth to have laying strains of ducks. In the contest of last year some of the ducks produced more eggs in twelve months than did the best-laying hens.

Country Life in America, issued by Doubleday, Page & Co., in New York, had its second in the coming of The Garden Magazine. Within a few months they are to issue a strictly farming magazine along the same lines as their other two publications. These people seem to occupy a class by themselves in attractive publications.

We have just received from Prof. James E. Rice, College of Agriculture, Ithica, N. Y., a list of the coming winter course in Farmer's Sons and Daughters and the special classes in poultry husbandry. All who are anxious to take up the study of poultry, or any of the agricultural branches, should send to Mr. Rice for full particulars. We are also in receipt of a prospectus of the Columbia School of Poultry Culture at Waterville, N. Y. These people are engaged in the pursuit of poultry instructions through correspondence by mail. They now have on their lists some fifteen hundred students scattered throughout the country. Their course seems to be giving general satisfaction to all that have taken it up.

In speaking of the International Show, held at Alexandria Palace, November 7 to 9, the writer in Feathered World states as follows: "The entries were up to last year's numbers. The attendance was certainly better, and everything was nicely arranged. Judging in some instances was rather protracted, and consequently awards were not put as early as they might have been, and on the second day catalogues were delayed, and even then were not completed. Still, everything worked harmoniously and Mr. Thornton and his committee, ably backed up by Miss Thornton and the rest of the family put their shoulder to the wheel and made things move along briskly." We should imagine from the report of the International that it was rather a slight affair compared with the Crystal Palace.

In writing of the Crystal Palace Show, the same paper states: "What use to be the poultry and pigeon event of the year is over. It is not by any means the same Palace Show that we have been wont to attend in years gone by. There does not seem to be the same interest nor the same class of exhibitors on the opening day as in former years. Taken upon the whole, the show was a much better one than last year, but there is still more room for improvement before it can attain the high position it once held in the fancy in years gone by." We think it is a great pity that the Crystal Palace authorities do not put their show on really national lines, and so obviate the necessity for holding two great shows at the same time. If these two leading events of the season could be held conjointly under popular management, we feel confident that it would be far better for every one concerned, and we trust that another year such will be the case.

Judging from the list of sales reported for the Crystal Palace and the International shows, we are led to believe that the larger attendance and the highest prices prevailed at the International. There has been some suppressed murmuring of the management of the Crystal Palace. Those too long in the saddle frequently ride to their own destruction.

The catalogue is out for the great Madison Square Garden Show, that opens January 2, in New York City. The list of judges selected are as follows: Poultry—David A. Nichols, J. F. Crangle, Geo. H. Burgott, W. C. Denny, A. A. Parker, M. F. Deleno, Dr. J. S. Wolf, Daniel J. Lambert, Chris. Kirschler, J. H. Drevenstedt, Geo. H. Northup, Herbert Smith, C. M. Griffling, F. A. Keller, Richard Oke, Joseph B. Thomas, H. J. Quilhot, Charles Cornman, H. P. Schwab, Eugene Stiles, George Purdue, Ross C. H. Hallock, S. B. Johnson. Pigeons—Charles E. Lang, Wellington Kennedy, George B. Hart, A. M. Ingram, Joseph Bardroff, W. J. Stanton, R. N. Oliphant, F. L. Weston. Pet Stock—Augustus Rheinhardt.

H. Crawford, Montclair, N. J., is ready to forward catalogues to all who send application for same.

Recent experiments with alfalfa hay as a meat-producing problem with cattle and an egg-producing proposition with poultry has only emphasized more strongly the claims made through the columns of our paper for several years, that alfalfa was the best green food ever grown for cattle and poultry.

The Cornell Incubator Company have booked more orders up to the first of November than they can possibly finish and ship by the end of the year. They seem more than gratified with the largely increased business. So far this season, beginning with the 1st of October, they have sold more than double the amount of goods that were sold during the same period last year.

One of the most beautiful premium lists or show catalogues that we have ever seen is the one just issued by the Oconomowoc Poultry Association that is to be judged by Editor Heck. It has become quite popular of late to publish the picture of the judge in the catalogue. We are pleased to admit that Friend Heck makes a most attractive frontispiece for this well-executed publication.

The Rhode Island Red fancier, J. W. Schievel, jr., and his partner, Henry L. Fox, seem to have parted company. We imagine that both of these gentlemen will still continue to keep the best Rhode Island Reds on earth.

B. W. Mosher, superintendent of the Great Eastern Show, wishes us to announce the loss of a Buff Orpington pullet, leg band No. 82. She belongs to J. W. Andrews, Dover, N. J., and we trust that whoever may have the pullet will notify him.

We read frequently in the poultry papers the advice to scatter lime throughout the houses, nest-boxes, dropping board and runways of a poultry plant. Slaked lime may be a good disinfectant, and may be well scattered in damp places as a sanitary measure. Wherever this is used the shanks of the poultry become bleached and almost totally disfigured for exhibition purposes. There is no advantage to be gained through the use of slaked lime that can not be as well obtained through the use of dry earth from your land. Continually digging up, week after week, will keep the ground in a healthy condition. Dry earth from the farm or garden spot is better for the dropping board, nest-boxes and floors than lime. Dry earth is the best disinfectant we have.

The Danbury Show held under the auspices of the Western Connecticut Poultry Association, last week, was the largest and best in the history of this excellent body of fanciers.

It was held at the Armory and about eight hundred birds faced the judges, the greatest collection, as a whole, the three adjudicators ever ran up against in Hat Town.

The judging was done on Thanksgiving Day and D. A. Nichols, W. Card and J. H. Drevenstedt had to go without turkey that day; it kept all three busy until late in the afternoon. All awards were made, ribbons up and specials placed by 4:30 in the afternoon.

Secretary Brundage is a hustler and his two brothers belong in the same class. The classification was excellent and the cooping good. The light in the hall was the only faulty feature. It was good on two sides and decidedly bad on the other two. But willing assistants carried the birds to the light for the judges and the latter had no particular fault to find with this arrangement except the unavoidable delay caused in carrying birds back and forth.

The writer of these notes has judged and handled the American classes at Danbury a number of years and has seen the show grow up so to speak. This year the American classes exceeded all records as far as Barred and Buff Rocks and White Wyandottes were concerned. In quantity and quality the showing in these classes was superb.

Barred Rocks came first in the list of entries and made a showing that in quality would rival some of the best shows held in the country, the Madison Square Garden not excepted. There were fifteen cocks to start with. First a grand one in type, even in color, narrowly and evenly barred, good head and comb, well shown; second, another fine one in color and barring, with the others close up, but all were still shy of condition.

Barred Rock hens made up a beautiful cluster of fine ones, first being grand in color, straight, even barring, fine shape, good comb, beak and legs, the best hen we have seen this season; second was another fine one in color and barring, with other winners strictly first-class and one unplaced hen minus wing feathers, but a beauty in color and barring.

The cockerel class in Barred Rocks was the strongest and best we ever handled at Danbury, and we doubt if a better lot ever faced a judge at such an early show. There were twenty-seven birds and excepting about three youngsters who were not fledged out, all were in fine condition. The first, second, fourth and fifth prizes all went to one exhibitor and the birds looked like brothers, type and barring being the same. First was a grand-shaped bird, fine comb, even in color, albeit a trifle dark, very evenly and narrowly barred, especially strong in wing-bow, primary and secondary barring; he won through finish in all departments; second, another good one, was very similar, but not as ripe or finished; third, a large, well-matured bird, had good style and shape, good, even color and well barred; fourth was the gem in the class as far as color was concerned; bright in surface, clean, even barring, minus brown or metallicism, good comb, head and legs and very good in type but without tail-feathers and rather ragged in that section. We believe this bird at later shows will be able to hold his own in the best of company.

There were forty-eight Barred Rock pullets penned and this class was a hard one to handle as many good birds were too young to show at their best and some of the older ones were composed of too many different types to make selections easy. First was a beautiful bird in color, very evenly barred and ringed in every section, nice comb, head, beak and legs, good shape and while a trifle under size, was a grand specimen; second, another fine one, was larger in size, very good in color, but not quite as evenly barred as winner; third and fifth were of a different type, more narrowly barred and darker in color; fourth was similar to second and a very good one.

Barred Rock pens mustered seven, first winning by evenness of females, a grand lot of hens, and headed by a very even-colored and barred male; second was a fine bunch of youngsters, even in color and well barred; the other pens were close up, not a poor one in the lot.

Buff Plymouth Rocks were a very warm proposition and in quality the best we ever handled in this hotbed of Buffs. Unfortunately some of the birds were cooped in the darkest part of the hall and their fine qualities were lost to the observers in the aisles. In bringing them to the light, however, we discovered many diamonds in the rough, and believe that some of the unplaced pullets especially, at later shows, will make lively trotting for their competitors. There were at least a dozen young or immature pullets that had color and shape as fine as one could ask for. Just watch for these later. There were a few good young Buff cockerels that will bear watching also.

Buff Rock cocks were only eight but all good, first being the best in color in surface and under; second, better shape, in fact the best in type, but lost in under color of hackle; third, another fine one, was a trifle heavy in comb but close up, in fact there was little choice in the first three. The ten hens shown, excepting a few, were not in the best of feather, first being very even in surface color and good in type, second was close up; others, barring condition, were high-class. Cockerels were a fine bunch, first being a symphony of golden buff in all sections, nice shape, good comb and legs; second, another large, fine-shaped bird, was not quite as even in color but a very close contender for the honors; third was a fine one in color but not ripe; four and fifth were both high-grade specimens in color but need more age. Pullets, a magnificent class, were the best and largest in quality we have ever seen. First and special, also winner of the sweepstakes for best bird in the show, is the grandest Buff Rock pullet we ever handled, and was the cause of much delight to the Buff Rock fanciers in the show. Having a good head and comb, nice shape and good legs, she was even golden-buff color all over, every section harmonizing, tail-feathers were clear buff with no trace of ticking, primaries and secondaries the same; second, another fine bird in surface, was not quite so well-matured, but a dangerous competitor in any show; third, of a large, fine shape, was a trifle darker in surface; fourth and fifth were both fine in color and good in shape. Buff pens brought out a grand bunch, first winning in evenness of color, size and shape; second but a trifle behind, lacking only age to go higher. The rest were high-class but most too young.

The White Wyandottes classes were crowded to the limit, doubling up of hens and pullets in the coops being necessary in order to accommodate the overflow. The best real breeders of the popular Whites in the Nutmeg State competed for the honors, as will be seen by consulting the awards or looking over the catalogue. To win a ribbon in such a bunch of good ones is a pretty stiff proposition and no little honor. We have handled some hard classes in the past ten years and a few larger ones, but we doubt if we ever handled a more even lot of really choice specimens than at Danbury. Frankly speaking, while it was hard work, it was a perfect treat at the same time. The birds, like the exhibitors, were "good fellows."

There were nineteen cock birds in line. A pretty fine old-guard they represented, not a weed in the bunch. First, a blocky bird of good type, head and comb, very white in plumage, good, yellow legs and beak well shown; second, a beautiful bird in type, fine head and comb, white plumage, minus tail feathers and still in molt; will make a hard one to beat later on; third was similar to first; not in good feather. The rest, fine in type, were not in best feather and a trifle off in color. Hens a grand lot, first an ideal in shape, being an exact counterpart of the new Standard illustration, good comb, beak and legs, pure white plumage and but for paleness in eyes, the nearest to a perfect White Wyandotte hen we have yet seen; second was another remarkable bird, very similar in type to winner; the rest were all so high-class and sound in type and plumage that with the other two charmers away, they would win the ribbons in a walk. Of the twenty-seven cockerels exhibited the winners of first, second and third were very similar in type, the first,

IF WE should select any other subject for our artist, we doubt if he could again equal the above presentation of the great utility poultryman of America. We do not think the equal of this likeness has been made in our collection, and we should like to see Uncle Mike when he gazes on himself in farmer attire.

barring a little coarseness in comb, being an ideal in type, a bird of curves, pure white in plumage, sound in color of legs and beak. The entire lot of winners were first-class in plumage, shape and maturity deciding the placing of the awards. Pullets were another grand bunch, the winners being very strong in type, notably first and second, the latter being very close to winner, the only point of difference being in the absolute whiteness of plumage. In pens, first won out by having a magnificent lot of hens, white as snow, fine in type headed by a very good male, second, another beautiful pen of young birds, the rest of pens first-class.

The above notes cover the classes handled by the writer. The other classes will be written up by Mr. Card and found in the regular report of the Danbury Show, with the list of awards.

The Hon. D. A. Nichols and his son spent the evening together before Thanksgiving Day at Danbury, Conn. The father is a judge of chickens and the son is going to be a judge of men. If we do not miss our guess the boy will make a very good judge. He is as frank and open as his father and that is "nuff ced."

We are pleased to learn that D. A. Nichols and William Card will judge at Boston next January.

There are more poultry shows in the East in January than there are poultry judges. Several first-class shows, all being held the same week, are having difficulty in finding judges, i. e., all-round judges.

Mr. Geo. Pan Burgott sent us a postal card and paper from San Francisco, Cal. George is out there judging, or rather was out there last week. He had a big class of Leghorns, a big time and is wild over the climate. Informs us that there were two thousand birds at Frisco. He forgot to inform us what time the Hon. T. E. Orr will leave the Pacific coast to get back to Beaver, Pa. There are a few people in the effete East that are anxious to get Standards from the honorable secretary of the American Poultry Association, and just now they want the Standard mighty quick and much.

The writer of these notes has always maintained that the Muscovy duck, properly bred and fed, is the best of all the web-footed tribe. This has been our experience during twenty years, and to judge by the experience of Dr. Kendall, of S. C., and several others, who have kept Muscovoys for table use, they have had the same favorable experience. A letter from W. H. Card, received a few days ago, contained the following: "The Muscovy is the best flesh duck that swims, and no exception. I can sell Muscovys at four months old at thirty cents a pound, that dress from four to eight pounds each, where I could not give Pekins away. I sell anywhere from one hundred to two hundred every year to private trade, and can't sell any other kind." These are cold facts written by a man who is a practical poultry raiser, depending solely on his little farm and poultry for a living. He has made the farm pay, although he had a hard row to hoe in the beginning. Practical experience, hard work and good marketing abilities are the causes of "Billy" Card's success. He knows what he writes and talks about.

Dallastown, Pa., Poultry Show

By George O. Brown

When the writer was asked to judge a poultry show in the little town of Dallastown, Pa., and a first show at that, the conclusion was that the usual crude arrangements, poor cooping and classification, with a few birds of ordinary quality would be the result. Poultry judges do not take kindly to first poultry shows. But the Dallastown poultry show was one that was different. It didn't have any of the marks or even the symptoms of a first or amateur effort. The coops were all brand-new and were made by the members of the association; the birds were properly classified and tagged and everything was in readiness for the judge to start before 9 a. m. The show was held in a closed market-house with windows on all sides, giving an excellent light, both for the work of judging and exhibiting the birds in their coops. All these essentials, which reflected great credit on the members of the association, took the judge by surprise. It wasn't what was expected.

But another still greater surprise came when it was discovered that the specimens on exhibition all had quality with them. There was nearly five hundred entries, and in every class there were birds that would score in the nineties. In many of the classes the competition was exceedingly close, and after the five awards were made five more could also have been made on "bang-up" good specimens, too. If the boys around Dallastown have got any poor birds they didn't bring them to the show. That they didn't have all their good birds in the show-room the writer knows, for he visited several yards and found plenty of quality there.

The hottest class in the show was a long snowdrift of sixty-four White Wyandottes. The first pen was of unusual merit, females uniform and the male very typical. In all points it was enough to give any one the White Wyandotte fever. They made the judge sweat, and in many instances linger and carefully go over the points before final decisions were made. White Rocks were out in force and many shapely, strong pointers were in battle royal for the honor. Buff Rocks were a remarkably strong class, excellent in color. First pen was very uniform in color, fine standard buff, good shape. Second pen but little behind in general excellence.

Another good class was the Silver-laced Wyandottes and the Partridge Wyandottes followed close. Prize-winning Buffs were very good in shape and color. There was also quite a display of Columbians. Black Minorcas were strong in numbers and quality, and the young birds sure comers.

The Dallastown fanciers have every reason to be proud of their first effort, and the splendid care they gave the birds proved they were genuine fanciers. They will have, doubtless, plenty of applications for membership and the association is destined to make its mark in Pennsylvania.

Dallastown is a village of fourteen hundred population, situated in York County, seven miles from York by trolley. The houses are neat, modern cottages, all having a thrifty, attractive appearance, being mainly homes, as nearly every one owns his home in the town. In about every yard can be seen some pure breed of poultry. Every man in town smokes cigars and the supply never runs short as there is one hundred cigar factories in operation. Fancy poultry is a real fad recreation there and quality counts for more than quantity. The officers of the association are H. M. Raab, president; R. A. Knisley, vice-president; Jacob Eberly, secretary, and Henry Metz, treasurer.

Clover for Poultry

No other green feed in its natural or dry state equals clover and alfalfa for poultry. The alfalfa fields, where it is grown, are the constant resorts of old and young turkeys. Ducks and geese, too, swarm to them whenever the opportunity offers. No kind of green food, growing or dry, has the same attraction for poultry as has alfalfa growing in the field, or in winter when dried for hay.

It would pay every person who keeps poultry during winter months for eggs, to lay in a supply of alfalfa hay where it is possible. When this can not be obtained, clover hay stands next in line. Alfalfa or clover hay either one can be used profitably, even though it may cost as much as $10.50 per ton. Always remember to give the preference to alfalfa hay when it can be obtained. The best way to feed the alfalfa or the clover hay to hens is to pass it through a cutting-box set to cut in length not to exceed a half an inch. Cut this by the basketful, and throw it into the poultry houses. The hens will consume all that is of food value; they will hunt, dig and scratch for it as long as there is any to be found. Gather up in baskets all the loose leaves from the clover or alfalfa hay, all the fine refuse or waste in the mangers of the cowbarns can be profitably utilized in the same way. All the chaff in the mows where this kind of hay is kept, or from the ground in the fields where it is stacked can be most profitably turned to account, if gathered up and scattered in the henhouse.

There is a use made of ground clover and clover meals that we consider both unprofitable and unnatural. The world is full of proper ration propositions. When you make part of the mash food of ground clover, you compel the hen to eat it or not. Presuming that the poultry has had a chance to eat a sufficient amount of the leaves from the clover or alfalfa hay, and you compel them to eat as much more in their mash food, perhaps you have overdone their clover supply, and through this over-supply have excluded the possibility of the balance ration so desired in the hen. Of all things in the world, let the hen satisfy her own demand for green food in winter from cut alfalfa or clover hay. They can not have too much of this, for the refuse that is left and not consumed has its value as scratching material or litter on the floors of the poultry house.

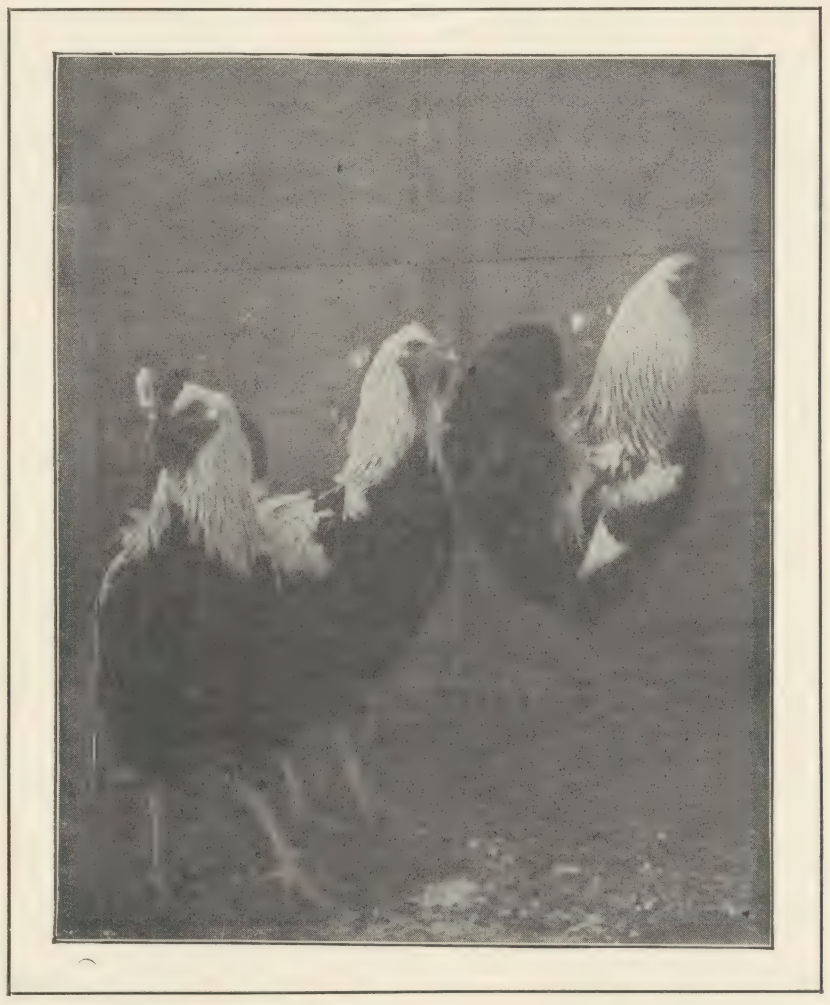
SILVER PLYMOUTH ROCKS

Although this variety is getting into the hands of quite a number of poultry fanciers one can find practically no mention of them in the columns of the poultry press. It being known that I enthusiastically favor them I have been asked to write an article on them. In this I have been backward principally because I have never in any sense been a claimant to being an originator of this variety and as there seem to be four such claimants in the field and believing that what these men could write of more value and of more authority I have preferred to stand aside. Also, I have never been in sympathy with those misguided individuals who will rush into print claiming all sorts of laudatory things for a new breed they may have taken up. Such claims by such people always do the new breed or variety more harm than good.

It will be noticed I speak of them as Silver Plymouth Rocks rather than as Silver-penciled Plymouth Rocks. This is an important distinction for two reasons. A distinction I hope all future breeders of the variety will strongly uphold.

Silver-penciled Plymouth Rocks flavors strongly of Single-combed Silver-penciled Wyandottes. The true Silver Plymouth Rocks are not Single-combed Silver-penciled Wyandottes, and, to insist upon this fact most strongly at this point in their history, is of the utmost importance; because most fanciers believe, or will tell you, that they are nothing more than Single-combed Wyandottes. This has been fostered by one or two writers saying it in print, and using the word penciled when speaking of these Rocks will tend to clinch this impression. Silver-penciled Plymouth Rocks is cumbersome and unnecessary as a variety designation. Silver Plymouth Rocks will entirely answer and will be far more a descriptive and pleasing derivation than for instance the title, Dark Brahmas, given birds of the parent coloring. Dark Plymouth Rocks would hardly be descriptive or pleasing, but in the score of brevity and popularity would outrank Silver-penciled Plymouth Rocks.



If it can not be Silver Plymouth Rocks, then it should be, to be consistent, Dark Plymouth Rocks.

A variety believed or reported generally to be nothing more than a Single-combed Wyandotte sport evidently suffers in reputation because of the old, by-gone period when a Single-combed White Wyandotte, for instance, could be shown as a White Plymouth Rock and win. This was hard lines for breeders of the true Rocks—made them protest loudly, as was proper, and made the whole business of bad repute generally.

Now there are strong claimants in the field that Silver Plymouth Rocks are not Single-combed Silver-penciled Wyandotte sports, and I believe their claims to be good and valid ones, because principally I have never been able to find any Single-combed Silver-penciled Wyandottes that could hold a candle to the real Silver Plymouth Rocks in size and shape. Nor in breeding what I speak of as the true Plymouth Rocks have I been able to note any sign of reversion to the Wyandottes.

Of equal importance, too, these Silver Plymouth Rocks of entirely different origin will easily rank with the Silver-penciled Wyandottes in quality and perfectness of plumage—in hackles of female even seeming to excel over them. While unlike the Single-combed Wyandottes they will attain an immense size and be most rapid and profitable growers and layers of as fine, large typical Rock eggs as is possible to find. I have had cocks reach twelve pounds, and that would fill a Climax band intended for Asiatics.

When I say I can not find any Single-combed Silver-penciled Wyandottes that will hold a candle to real Silver Rocks, I say so after personally speaking and writing to practically all the best breeders of this variety, and having had birds from most of them sent to me. In the fall of 1904 I paid out some $12 in express charges in returning such single-combed sports. In the spring of 1905 I discarded all such I had rather than use them as breeders. Not that I would not use such a sport if I find one equal in size, shape and color to what I already have. For I could safely and easily do this, pedigreeing and keeping a record, as I do, of every chick I hatch.

SILVER PLYMOUTH ROCK COCKERELS

The Silver Plymouth Rocks that I like the best came to me claiming to be bred as follows: Roughly stated—a Dark Brahma-Silver-gray Dorking-Mottled Java cross. Such a combination promises well as to size and value as a market fowl and from other economic points of view. Females from this line reach the fine quality of plumage and coloring found in the best of the other lines. Males and females, especially the former, run to the extreme in size and in chicks are remarkable for their vigor and vitality. Their marked activity and rapid growth and their fine laying qualities are of equal value. This line shows the Dorking blood in the purity of color in the males and occasionally very strong in the shape of a growing chick.

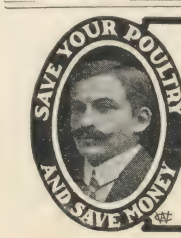
This year I have had three chicks hatch with five toes, but these were not allowed to live. There was also one which, when killed at a weight of six pounds, had developed white legs and dressed with a white skin. This chick was in this respect either a freak, or a Dorking, as the rule is for chicks to come with the finest yellow legs. The three chicks and this chick all owned as their dam a hen that in head strongly favored the Dorking family, but had fairly good yellow legs rather short. The Mottled Java cross I have in no way been able to note except perhaps in an occasional pullet of poor markings, with beautiful, yellow shanks.

It is a matter of regret with we that I can not, on account of lack of room, try these crosses in the original. Not that I would expect to gain much thereby as the Silver Plymouth Rocks as they bred for me this season run to a most remarkable degree of evenness of quality.

Another line, perhaps the oldest and best known, and one on which certainly a good deal of the most intelligent sort of breeding has been put, is that of Single-combed Silver-penciled Wyandotte sports, strongly fortified by yearly infusions of Dark Brahma blood, or recent Dark Brahma crosses, being in some instances thirteen-sixteenths Dark Brahma. If these are as claimed, and I have every reason to believe so, this cross gives a large, fine-looking bird, especially in females, with a proneness to stubs on shanks. The first prize pullet at St. Louis World's Fair so much admired was of this line. This female was easily the equal in penciling of any penciled bird shown and was superb in color.

Ever since I have had Silver Plymouth Rocks I have looked at them and studied them from the double mating standpoint or plan, and the chicks this year certainly turned out as even in quality, shape, size and color as is found in Barred Plymouth Rocks bred the same way. In so far as shape and size is concerned they could outrank many lots of Barred Plymouth Rock chicks. An apposition to them, as a new breed, merely because they are a new breed, is silly and uncalled for. The time was when Barred Plymouth Rocks, when every variety we have was a new thing, and probably met with opposition, perhaps worse. If Silver Plymouth Rocks are a good thing, and I believe they are, they are bound to win out and make themselves a place. They have besides what I have hinted at in this article wonderful beauty of color and marking. Not merely a repetition of the old white, buff, black, etc., but of a color and marking comparatively rare in poultrydom.—W. Theo. Wittman.

New Plymouth Rocks



There has been much said and written of late with reference to the new varieties of Plymouth Rocks known as the Partridge and the Silver-penciled Plymouth Rocks. One of the most prominent workers for these new varieties is Mr. Roland G. Buffinton, of Fall River, Mass. We give below his report to us as to the origin of Partridge Plymouth Rocks:

"In the early days of breeding Partridge Wyandottes many of them came with a single comb. Having had experience in starting new breeds of poultry I caught on to the idea at once and called these single-combed specimens Partridge Plymoth Rocks. I also used females from a first cross of Partridge Wyandotte and Partridge Cochin. Other parties had made this cross and called them Golden Plymouth Rocks. I purchased some of this stock to get new blood and it proved to be good. Dr. Aldrich made a cross of Rhode Island Red and Partridge Wyandotte. As he did not have time to bother with them I purchased his stock. The females from this cross were almost perfect in penciling. My success in starting this new breed has pleased me very much. There seems to be quite a boom in them this year. I raised about eighty pullets in 1903 and there were only five per ct. that could be called culls and fifty per ct. of them were suitable for exhibition. The cockerels were not as good, but part of that was my fault, as I bred from one bird purchased from a stranger, which proved to be worthless. Nearly all the males had yellow legs, some with a few stubs. This will doubtless occur for several years. This variety of poultry is not better than all other varieties. Their laying qualities are as good as the Barred or White Plymouth Rock and make better dressed poultry than any of the Plymouth Rock family. This good quality no doubt came from the Partridge Cochin. We exhibited a pen of Partridge Plymouth Rocks at Boston in 1902 and 1903, also at Rochester, N. Y., 1904, and a pair at Atlantic City, N. J., 1902, and won first prize at every show."

Proposed Changes in the Constitution and By-laws of the A. P. A.

In the circular sent out by the secretary of the American Poultry Association, there are a number of changes proposed that should be carefully studied and considered by the membership that will be called upon to cast their vote for or against these propositions at the coming meeting in Cincinnati during the third week in January.

We think many of the proposed amendments adverse to the best interests of the membership and the poultry fraternity at large. The first amendment to Article 2, Section 1, page 292 of the new Standard, paves the way for an unwarranted inroad upon the resources of the association by an attempt to hold either a national or county branch shows under the organization. The second clause of this same amendment declares that the association shall publish a poultry paper monthly, semimonthly or weekly, and that this paper shall be the official organ of the association. In connection with this and slyly hidden away is another clause, which reads as follows: "But when the poultry paper shall have been established, as provided in Article 2 of the constitution, the home office for the association shall be the publication office of the paper." Here is a change in the constitution and by-laws that makes the association responsible for the publishing of a poultry paper, the establishing of an office for this paper, and the legal establishing of the place to file a suit in the home office of the association which shall be the publication office of the paper.

Following this, Article 5: "The salary of the secretary-treasurer shall not be less than $600 per year. The amount of the secretary-treasurer's salary shall be determined by the Executive Committee at the time of the annual meeting, subject to the above limitation. He shall also, after July 1, 1906, be allowed not to exceed $400 per year for stenographer's fee or salary, the amount actually paid to the stenographer to be included in the official report of the secretary-treasurer. The secretary-treasurer is not precluded from conducting his private correspondence through the stenographer if he faithfully conducts the correspondence of the association, keeping copies of all letters."

Here is the first and most outspoken declaration of destruction to the American Poultry Association and the depleting, without consideration, of its treasury of not less than $1,500 to be paid for salary, stenographer and room rent, with the expressed privilege provided that after the slight correspondence of the association has been attended to the stenographer employed by the association shall spend the balance of the time in writing private business letters for the secretary-treasurer. The writer of this has in mind several enthusiastic poultrymen that could and would willingly spend five or six hundred dollars in the political pursuit of such an office, with the outspoken expression that this was the greatest cinch they ever went up against; they would willingly spend seven hundred of the fifteen among the boys to have an office with a stenographer to look after their private business. Of all the ridiculous propositions put forward in the American Poultry Association this most certainly takes the lead.

The above is only a beginning of the end. In our next we shall consider the proposition of poultry shows to be held under the auspices of the association. Barnum, with all his several exhibitions, great and small, the big tents and the little tents, and the propositions to separate his audience from their coin, scarcely surpassed the proposition proposed for branch organizations and poultry shows in connection with the association. The only saving clause in this proposition is the wily bait held out which says that one-half of the net proceeds shall be turned over to the mother association. How many of the smaller shows even pay expenses? How long would it take for such a drain upon the treasury to bankrupt the entire association? We hope that every poultryman in the United States will write to the office of the secretary-treasurer for a copy of these proposed by-laws and consider the proposition with us.

The Experience of an Old Fancier

Editor The American Fancier:

When I retired from the army I promised myself that I never would breed fowls again, that I would not tie myself up again, that I would be free to come and go, without a care left at home. I tried to do so. I visited the St. Louis Fair, but did so during the week of the Poultry Show, and I actually came home without buying a single fowl, but, when the winter came on, I was at home, and I wanted occupation sadly. There stood my long row of breeding pens vacant. I had brought with me from Japan some small game fowls which I thought would be all I would ever keep, but there stood the empty pens, thirteen of them. Not being used during my long absence some repairs were needed for appearance sake, which I made.

With spring hastening on, I thought I would get a few eggs and see if I could stand it without getting too much interested again. A neighbor had some fair Buff Rocks. I bought a sitting of eggs; and I was gone; and the hen wanted to sit. I got another sitting and, in all four, out of these fifty-two eggs, I raised forty-eight chicks to maturity, a goodly showing, surely.

Why! oh why! won't people buy of the neighbor fancier? I suppose that it is the gilding distance gives. "I'll send off and beat my neighbor," is the moving cause, when all that is needed is better care. The aforesaid neighbor wanted to know where I got the eggs, from which I hatched my chicks, he could hardly believe it that they were from his own stock. Better care made better chicks in size, vigor and color, and that's the way to beat your neighbor, if you can at all, but that's a digression.

I was renewing my childhood, sure enough; I was being born again into the fancy, and born with the liking of long ago. The grand old breeds filled my ideas and wants, so I seem to have been borne back in 1852, which means that I must have Dorkings, so I got eggs. The fact is my wife and daughter insisted on Dorkings. 'Cause why? When I left home I left a few Dorkings and the crosses were still on the place when I returned; and my wife wanted Dorkings for the table. These cross breeds had such fine-fleshed, full bodies that my wife considered them absolutely necessary for housekeeping. It is funny, but the same thing happened when I left home in dear old Otsego County, New York, to fight for the Union. I had Dorkings there, and, when I returned, dear mother said there was nothing like these Dorking crosses for the table. You see, in each occasion, until I left home, the folks did not get any Dorkings for the table.

I must also have some Polish. So I got eggs of both White-crested Black and White. Here I am in the swim again, tied up into a knot, at home with every pen filled with Dorkings, Polish, Buff Rocks and Games, with vast plans for the future, the chicken fever worse than in its first attack.

It strikes me that our Buff breeds, outside of the Cochins, beat the Cochins in buff color. I serve notice here and now that I am in the lists for a standard for old English Games and the Oriental Games—I mean the warrior games. The fighting fellows are also very beautiful. I know it is said that the only way to test a Pit Game is in the pit. That is so if the only purpose is to fight them, but there are hundreds of fanciers who, like myself, admire the warrior game for his beauty and gallant bearing, his rich colors; who do not fight or wish to fight them, and who want their favorites admitted to the showroom along with the favorites of the other fellow, while the man who breeds for the pit may care nothing for color, and has a flock of all colors, yet the warrior game does breed true to color, truer than any other breed of fowls. The old English warrior Game and the Dorking are the most ancient breeds we have any authentic history of.—Theodore Sternberg.

Discard the idea of curing diseases or ailments in your poultry. Avoid this by preventing its presence. So house, feed and care for your poultry as to utterly obliterate the possibility of contagious diseases at least. Slight ailments may crop in as the result of unseasonable weather. Do not harbor sickly, ailing fowls. Use only as producers strong, vigorous specimens, weeding out continually the weaklings.

People are beginning to prefer eggs to meat. They will learn to like them better as the meat becomes higher in price. Poultry can be grown everywhere; meat can not.

A SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

DON'T KILL A HEN WITH MONEY IN HER LIKE THIS

WE TEACH YOU HOW TO PICK OUT YOUR LAYING HENS

Don't kill the laying hen—the hen with money in her.
Learn our secret.
Know how to select the laying hen from the non-laying hen. This profitable information will teach you—
1st. Not to kill the hen that is laying.
2nd. To pick out the non-laying hen.
3rd. To know how far advanced the hen is toward the laying point.
4th. To avoid wintering hens that are not likely to be good winter layers.
5th. To know how to select the hen having strong laying powers for breeding purposes.
6th. To know the hen that has entirely lost her power of egg production.
7th. To know how to sort out the hens in summer or fall that have ceased laying for the year.
8th. To know the hen that has become weakened in her laying powers.
9th. To know how to buy hens in the early winter that will make good layers, and dispose of them at a large profit after receiving their crop of eggs.

ILLINOIS STATE FAIR, SEPT. 30 TO OCT. 7, 1905.

The following are a few of the gentlemen who have taken our system. Read the names. You will find that every man stands high in the poultry fraternity:

Springfield, Ill., October 3, 1905.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that T. F. Potter has demonstrated to our entire satisfaction the Potter System of selecting the laying hen from the non-laying hen, and we are convinced that his system is absolutely certain.

BROWN'S BUDGET

The hens have now come to the scratch on all well-regulated poultry plants.

The high price of eggs makes it pay to look well to the comforts and feeding of Mrs. Hen and the Misses Pullets.

It is always best to have more than one kind of grain food for the fowls' supper. Some hens do not seem at times to care for corn, and when there is nothing else, by the time they conclude they will eat some, the others have eaten it all.

A good authority about twenty-five years ago said the following sensible things which will always hold good: "I hold all artificial fattening and cramming of fowls to be an utter abomination, unless at the hands of the regular poultry salesman, who buys up country birds and treats them on a system; it is only supposed necessary by persons grossly ignorant. In an amateur establishment poultry should always be fat and fit for the table, the difficulty being to prevent them becoming too much so."

Remember that in winter charcoal is very beneficial to poultry. Charred corn on the cob is also a very good way to give it. Grit should always be accessible.

Don't know whether it is because 'tis said that the colored people of Maryland are fond of chicken and make nocturnal visits among them like the pestiferous mites, but hens are dreadfully afraid of any one carrying a bag. They are just as suspicious of their owner if he goes in the yard carrying a bag. Then they say hens have no sense.

If a fowl appears droopy and you can not find any symptoms of cold or vermin, give a teaspoonful of soda water. It may simply be a case of indigestion. Half a cup of water in which an even teaspoonful of bicarbonate has been dissolved is about the right strength.

More attention should be paid to having exhibits of dressed fowls at the winter poultry shows. Such displays are educational to the visiting public as they are real object-lessons of the utility value of the pure breeds.

Poultry fanciers of prominence recognize the fact that the Madison Square Garden Show is the banner show of the United States. Awards at any other show do not have the prestige of the Madison Square honors. It is a good advertisement for every man who enters birds at Madison Square whether they win prizes or not.

Conditions or environments are as important factors in successful poultry raising as food. In some locations nature has been lavish with favorable conditions. On some other places favorable conditions have to be created artificially in a sense. Adverse circumstances are often the very best test of a man's ability in almost any occupation. Failure should sharpen a man's efforts, and create in him a stronger ambition to succeed. Reason tells him plainly his lack of success is because he has not properly applied the essentials as the successful man in the same calling has.

It is to be hoped grand Philander Williams's indisposition will be but brief. Mr. Williams's career as a fancier has not only brought to him the highest honors but has greatly added to the respect of the fancy. No one knows him but to admire him. He was never known to kick at a show, and always seems to conclude every one is honest like himself. Would that there were more Philander Williamses in the fraternity.

And let us hope that I. K. Felch, the father of the score-card, who has given so many years of influence to bettering our feathered pets, will soon be able again to parade between the coop rows in his judicial duster. The writer has judged many shows in company with I. K., and always enjoyed his straightforward, earnest way.

Patience, headwork, thoroughness, sticktoitiveness and sense enough to make mistakes object-lessons are the essentials —some of them—for beginners in poultry raising. If you have proved a total failure in all other occupations you've tried, your ambition and fondness for work may be weak. Remember, however, these two things are important factors in poultry raising.

Some of the poultrymen who fatten poultry by the crate method, keeping not more than four in a crate, use as feed equal parts of fine cornmeal, oatmeal, shorts and barley-meal. They say this sort of food combination does not make the yellow flesh that used to be in demand. They also claim this food will cause the fat to become "distributed in streaks through the meat, where it makes the meat sweet and juicy and less fat on the intestines where it is sheer waste of the raw material." There will always be lessons to learn in the poultry business.

Ain't you glad you raked up a good supply of dry leaves, and secured several barrels of clean, dry road dust? Don't they come in nice now for the houses after the rains? It is such a satisfaction to know that the hens, after running around on a wet day, can have a clean, dry hen-house to roost in.

Whether the dry feeding system—no water-mixed mashes—is better than any other method is being discussed. There are some interesting and seemingly convincing arguments advanced in favor of dry feeding. Wish we could secure the opinions of the hens. It seems to be a much easier way anyhow, and no doubt some will adopt it on that account alone.

The man who insists on keeping china nest eggs in the nests in winter should himself be obliged to sleep between sheet-iron bed spreads without a night shirt. Hens show their good sense if they don't lay if they are expected to hover over china eggs in cold weather.

Ailments of Ducks

One of the most profitable features of duck culture is the usually good health, and the very small loss sustained in young ducks from the time they are hatched. There is, however, one ailment that is very injurious to the duck crop, and that is the rheumatism in their limbs that comes during very cold weather.

When ducks are permitted to run through the snow and slush and water during the winter months, without a dry, warm spot to go to and sit down and nestle their feet in the down of their breast, so as to dry and warm them, they are very apt to have violent attacks of rheumatism. We have known some instances where ducks would be out in the cold snow and slush and become so lame from rheumatism as to be caught out over night and frozen into the snow, thus perishing.

Every person who keeps ducks during the winter months should provide at least an open shed, the floor of which should be perfectly dry and covered with straw for them to go into and nestle upon to rest during the day, or to sleep on at night. Whenever the ducks show the influence of cold and rheumatism during the winter months, they should be confined, until they recover, within a shed that has a dry floor, and this floor covered with litter of some kind, as described above. Each day the litter should be thoroughly stirred up with a pitchfork and all dirt shaken under the straw. When the litter and the floor becomes dirty it should be thoroughly cleaned out and fresh, dry litter placed on the floor. Many valuable ducks and water-fowl of all kinds would be saved from uselessness through this treatment.

Don't Kill the Laying Hen

Thousands of hens are killed annually that are among the best layers in the flock, but the owner has heretofore had no way of knowing whether they were laying or not, and has had to trust to luck in selecting hens for slaughter. Realizing the value of knowing how to distinguish the laying hen from the non-laying hen, T. F. Potter & Co., of Downers Grove, Ill., have given the matter thorough study, and have made a discovery that will be worth thousands of dollars annually to the poultrymen of the country. They have discovered the secret and can tell in one second whether a hen is laying or not, or whether she will lay in the future. Read their large display ad in this issue and then send for their free circular giving full details. Address T. F. Potter & Co., Box 12, Downers Grove, Ill.

Martin's White Wyandottes won more prizes than any other exhibitor. First and Third Cockerel, First and Third Pullet, Second Cock, Second Hen and Second Pen. This was a remarkable win, owing to the fact that previous to this show they had been cooped nearly two weeks at the Toronto Show, and thus were not in as good condition as the birds they competed with.

Editorial Gossip

The unusual activity shown by the specialty clubs for a large gathering at New York is commendable, and in addition to this we wish to compliment the American fanciers on their enthusiastic invitation to their English brethren to come and show with them. Secretary Morton writes us that they have forwarded hearty invitations to the English breeders to enter with the club members at the annual meeting at Chicago, which shows the friendly spirit of the West. We understand that a number of English birds will be exhibited at New York, and we trust that some of them will go to the great city of the Middle West and contend with the American fanciers there in the center of the continent for the honors of Buff Plymouth Rocks.

We read in one of our western contemporaries the statement that there would be an attempt made to force the American Reds into the Standard of Perfection through a process of law to be applied at the Cincinnati meeting. While we believe that there might be a command issued from the court that would compel the printing of the description and name of American Reds upon the pages of the Standard, we believe that with all the folly of poultrymen, there is none so foolish as to do this; for as soon as the command of the court has been obeyed its province has ended. The association has the power at any successive meeting to land it out again.

We had hoped that the American Red - Rose-combed Rhode Island Red controversy had ended, and the only future of the contest would be decided at the meeting at Cincinnati as to whether it would be American Red or Rose-combed Rhode Island Red. We trust that we are right in this and the matter will be settled along the lines of true American sportsmen, willing to abide by the final decision of the majority. But it may be true that some are not satisfied with this; they may seek the command of the court to place them within the Standard. We are led to believe that some of the executives of the association would applaud such a course as a vindication of their actions. But there is a future even to all of this, and we doubt very much the good sense of any one continuing such an unreasonable contest, even for vindication.

We publish in this issue of The Fancier a continuation of the proposed changes in the Standard. Other papers have taken up the consideration of these remarkable suggestions, no one of which seems to cover the ground so thoroughly as does Editor Robinson when he mirthfully remarks: "Selah, some more." We are led to remark that it looks as though the association might get too much "Selah."

We believe from information at hand that there is a strongly increased disposition throughout the West to change front on some of the propositions that their members have fathered. There is always a delightful amount of goodness in every locality. That which floats on top attracts most attention; the deep rumbling of gathering determination underneath this floating few has begun to sound the warning which may mean better things in every way for poultry culture, poultry growers, poultry exhibitors and their belonging, the American Poultry Association.

There is but a short time left for making entries in the great New York Show. It is the rule of the management of the Madison Square Garden Show to cease to receive entries as soon as their cooping capacity has been claimed. We would not be surprised to learn prior to our next issue that many have been disappointed in having sent their entries too late to be accepted.

Mr. Samuel A. Roberts, secretary of the Boston Show, South Attleboro, Mass., has ready for delivery the catalogue and premium list of the coming Boston Show. Entries for these functions close with the 30th of December. The catalogue is rich in offerings of regular and cash specials. Poultry, pigeons, pet stock, turkeys and water-fowls will all be treated most handsomely with gold cups, medals and cash specials. Boston has always been the home of general distribution of large sums of money to exhibitors, and this year will not be any different from former occasions. Specialty judges have been selected for most of the classes. Boston for 1906 will be right up to date and fully equal to its best.

We have been requested by the secretary of the Cincinnati Show to extend to all of our readers, members of the American Poultry Association throughout the East, and eastern exhibitors to be present at the Cincinnati meeting during the week of January 15. "While regretting," he states, "the clashing of Boston and Cincinnati dates," he does not "feel that the Cincinnati management are the least to blame, they having given in their invitation to the secretary of the association the fact that their show dates had been selected for that week. Every one fully realizes the fact that the clashing of dates is a blunder, and we presume those responsible for this might have been induced to have arranged it otherwise if some things mentioned by Editor Robinson had been provided for. And while we should dislike to think that a meeting of that kind would hinge upon an appointment of a judge, the one accused of this stated less than a year ago in print, some very queer things about the influence of specialty clubs."

Snake stories have given way to egg stories. Two published recently are wonderful when giving an account of an egg laid by a hen that was seven and one-half inches around one way by six inches the other. Can it be possible that some one had placed a glass egg in the nest to fool the hen? Not to be outdone, however, Kentucky comes to the front with the statement that a gentleman from Hardeville reports to have found a lot of eggs in the wall of a house built fifty-three years ago, and to all outward appearance the eggs were in perfect condition, having been confined in air-tight space. This last is not quite up to the reports from China that they bury eggs there for a thousand years, and when they dig them up they use them for cheese with dessert in place of milk-made products.

For years the statement has been current and willingly accepted that milk has a great advantage when given to hens for the purpose of improving the egg yield. In the Experiment Report of The National Stockman and Farmer one of the conditions of experiment was to obtain the of value milk in feeding for eggs. The brief reply to same was that "milk has no special value."

A private communication from the one in charge of the experiments leads us to believe that in the near future there will be published some valuable information as to the use of milk and its value with hens. We have often held the opinion that there were many misrepresentations as to the surprising value of some articles of food made use for obtaining unusual egg records. We are inclined to the opinion that the advantages gained from milk are the same that are gained from feeding mash feed, and that is the quick or ready assimilation of the mash foods which brings the valuable returns; that the manner and methods of cooking and feeding these kinds of foods was responsible for the benefits obtained to an extent beyond the real food value of the milk that is used.

The above statements are prompted from seeing in print in so many of our agricultural papers within the past few weeks the positive statement that skimmed milk is excellent for laying hens. We have become notorious in some localities where we have lectured through the statement that skim milk or milk of any kind had better be given to the hogs in their slop than to the poultry in open vessels as a drink. We do not believe that skim milk has any value whatever as a ration for poultry when given to them to drink instead of water, but we do know beyond all peradventure that milk is the very best material that can possibly be used, when thoroughly boiled, to mix with the mash food. The advantages gained from the use of the milk in this way comes, as above stated, through the ready and quick assimilation of cooked or partly cooked mash foods that are mixed with the boiled milk; the advantages gained come from the conditions of the food partially cooked with the milk. The combination forms the very best possible kind of food for a large and continuous egg yield.

One of our exchanges states that if all poultrymen would be absolutely certain that there was not left a single louse, mite, nit or egg of same in the poultry-house as winter begins it would be an almost absolute guarantee against trouble from same the coming summer. This can be so easily done that every one should feel safe in the proposition. After a thorough effort to subdue the possibility of insect vermin, paint the roosts and nest-boxes, cracks and crevices of your poultry-houses several times during the winter so as to obliterate the presence of any vermin in and about the houses or upon the poultry. If this could be followed out without hesitation or cessation throughout the entire land, ere long the great poultry disturbance of insect vermin might be a thing of the past.

The editor of Farmer's Bulletin No. 200 on turkeys, should be delighted to know of the hundreds of thousands of applications for the bulletin throughout the country. This bulletin is issued by the Agricultural Department at Washington. Any one so disposed can have a copy by asking the Department to send it to them. Hundreds of agricultural papers throughout the world have made extracts from it, many publishing the entire bulletin. The use of the illustrations contained therein has been very marked. Assuredly the poultry growers of the country should be able to gain the most substantial benefit from this bulletin or from reading the extracts from it in the agricultural papers.

We regret to learn that Mr. John Rumbold, secretary of the American Light Brahma Club, met with a painful accident about a month ago, which explains why a number of members have had no answers to their letters, only the most important ones having been answered. Mr. Rumbold is out again (on crutches) and hopes to catch up with the club's business. In a recent letter he writes: "The American Light Brahma Club will give club ribbons for best cock, hen, cockerel, pullet and pen at the following shows: Madison Square Garden, New York; Chicago, Ill.; Paterson, N. J.; Newark, N. J., and Polo, Ill. Members only can compete. Ribbons will also be offered on Light Brahma Bantams at the coming Madison Square Garden Show, next month.

A poultry show will be held at Englewood, New Jersey, January 11 to 13, 1906. Mr. E. A. Haring is the secretary.

Mr. E. De Graff, of Amsterdam, N. Y., has purchased the entire stock of Columbian Wyandottes of Mr. Joseph Shull, including the latter's crack pullet, winner of first at Gloversville a few weeks ago.

Mr. Andrew Riddell, of Shushan, N. Y., is doing a big business in Buff Wyandottes, his sales in the past three months exceeding the sales made by him during the twelve months of the preceding year. "Andy" says the demand for first-class show birds is very large.

Mr. J. H. Scott, secretary of the Auburn (N. Y.) Show, informs us that the prospects for the "next annual" are very rosy and two extra judges have been added to the list, viz., Mr. M. S. Gardner, who will place the ribbons on Barred Plymouth Rocks, and Mr. N. Y. Whitbeck, who will handle the Buff Plymouth Rocks. The following state cups will be competed for at the show, January 18 to 22: Buff Wyandotte, Buff Rock, Orpington, Buff Leghorn and Rhode Island Red. Special cups on White Plymouth Rocks and on Asiatic classes as well as on Jacobin and other varieties of pigeons will be offered.

The entries at the "Great Ontario," Canada's famous winter show, held at Guelph this week, number three thousand three hundred and seventy. This is two hundred and fifty more than last year and indicates not only a healthy growth but the magnitude of this finely-managed exhibition. The utility breeds are far in the lead, White Wyandottes and Barred Rocks having especially large classes.

In the current issue of The Saturday Evening Post we find the following interesting item regarding the erstwhile famous "Prairie chicken:"

"Efforts are to be made, under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture, to reintroduce, and to some extent to domesticate, the species of grouse commonly known as the 'prairie chicken' in parts of the country where formerly it was plentiful, but in which it has been exterminated. That such a plan is practicable is indicated by the success of an experiment made three-quarters of a century ago in Kentucky by the naturalist Audubon, who secured sixty prairie hens and, clipping their wings, turned them loose in his garden and orchard, which contained about four acres. The birds quickly became tame, and 'walked about the garden like so many barnyard fowls, mingling occassionally with the domestic poultry.' In those days, according to Audubon, prairie chickens could commonly be purchased for a cent apiece; at the present time they are worth from $3 to $5 a brace, and the supply at that price does not equal the demand. An additional reason for the reintroduction of this bird, so much prized by the epicure, lies in the fact that it is most valuable as a destroyer of weeds and insects. So efficient is it in this way that its presence might be said to add appreciably to the value and productiveness of any farm. It is one of the noblest of game fowls, affording admirable sport, and for this cause alone its threatened disappearance is greatly to be regretted."

The demand for feathered game is very much on the increase and the person who will cater to the tastes of the fast-growing number of epicures will reap a rich reward.

The sale of Guinea fowl and Muscovy ducks, both of the gamy feathered tribe, is increasing yearly, as the fine qualities of these birds become better known. The prairie chicken opens up another avenue of experiment and speculation that may lead to a profitable business.

Sales at England's great Crystal Palace Show were good this year, amounting to about three thousand dollars, the top price being paid for a Black Rose-combed Bantam cockerel, viz., $270, a neat sum for such a tiny specimen of the feathered family. Miss Stuart was the fortunate owner who sold the bird.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture in its latest Canadian crop bulletin, speaks of poultry as follows: "Judging by returns just at hand, poultry is assuming a more important place than ever before in farming operations. Prices have been strong for both eggs and meat. Correspondents speak of broilers more frequently than usual and in this connection one of them remarks that the incubator is beginning to "loom large." Turkeys did not do so well as the other varieties of fowl, the spring being rather too cold and wet for them."

If the governments of the different states in the Union would take as much interest in stimulating the growing of poultry for market and eggs as the government of the Dominion of Canada, the lack of fresh eggs and young roasters and broilers in many sections of the United States would not be so great. Notwithstanding a mild, late fall and early winter fresh eggs are very scarce in this neck of the woods. The storage article at thirty-four cents a dozen is fairly plentiful, however. Young ducks are scare and a real nice goose is a curiosity. Yet we have plenty of good poultry papers that harp on the practical end of the hen business quite frequently and often strenuously, but when the writers get away from Rocks, Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds there is a big chicken world left to innocuous desuetude. As to ducks some writers evidently never saw, handled or ate anything except a Pekin. There is too much booming of a favored few at the expense of a meritorious many varieties.

Our old friend, Major Sternberg, is once more a full-fledged chicken fancier. He simply could not stay out of the business. The old Silver-gray Dorking brought him around for it reminded him of his boyhood days, when among the beautiful hills and in the valleys of Otsego County, N. Y., he had some of England's favorite fowl. He has them to-day and we are glad that so royal a fancier should take up so fine a breed. If ever a good fowl was shamefully neglected and unappreciated it is the Silver-gray Dorking. With reasonable care it will do well in any climate. A fine flock has been successfully kept in the city of Johnstown for a quarter of a century and the birds "paid the freight" every time.

Editor Bates in the December issue of his excellent American Poultry Journal makes the following pertinent and very timely remarks:

"At the majority of fairs this past fall the judging was enough to drive any one from the ranks. It does seem queer that after advertising a county fair poultry show quite extensively, after providing money for prizes, that the management would provide a suitable judge. All over the West and many dozen places in the East the obtaining of good poultry judges is left till one can not be obtained. There is only one thing to do to remedy the evil: let the breeders most interested in a fair get together and wait upon the fair's board of managers when they are in session. Then they may be able to get some concessions. As long as fanciers do not work together to obtain good judges, that long will the fairs be poorly handled. Let the fanciers keep hammering directors, managers and poultry superintendents till they get what is really needed."

The American Poultry Association could do some good missionary work in educating the "Reuben Glues" of the county fair, who think a silk badge and their name as an official in the premium list all that is required to run a poultry, hog, cow or horse department. In the state of New York there is no excuse whatever for employing incompetent and cheap judges. The plea of poverty will hardly fit the case as sufficient appropriations are made to insure the employment of capable men. If the A. P. A. and allied live-stock clubs would make out a list of qualified and competent judges, large enough to elect men from close-by localities to save mileage, much good would result. It ought to be done, but will it?

GEO. H. NORTHUP

THE gentleman portrayed above has the unique distinction of having sold a single specimen at a higher price than has been credited to any other poultryman. Mr. Northup might be termed the father of Black Minorcas in this country, as well as the originator of the Rose-combed variety of this breed. He is a self-made man and one of the most successful growers of poultry that we have.

Editor Bates, in another issue of his paper, commented upon the fact that judges are paid better in this country than in England. If he had stated "they used to be paid better," it would come very close to the mark. It is true that a number of the all-round judges still get their price at many shows; it is also true that some of these same men have been compelled to cut their price at some of the very big shows owing to the fact that so many specialty judges are required to handle a great show in the time limit required to get up a catalogue with awards in. This entails much more expense than was formerly the case when four or five men did the work of the fifteen or twenty adjudicators of to-day. Even at that the laborer is worthy of his hire and the trouble of the whole business lies with the gentlemen who want to judge for glory and not for revenue.

It was not so many years ago that a specialty judge, who hailed from the East, had a club show to handle not so very far from Editor Bates's private sanctorum. This judge was called down at a gathering of fanciers, judges and editors because his bill was too large. He was compelled to defend the charge in justice to himself. After paying railroad and hotel bills there was little or nothing left for the judge. It was a beautiful piece of "cheap skate" on the part of some one and a lack of courtesy on the part of some one else. If judges, who live by their profession, are compelled to bow down to the promoters of shows in order to help the latter make their business a winner there is something wrong in the business.

We know of several of the older judges that have refused to take shows unless their services are compensated for at a decent valuation; a few have dropped out of the business entirely and more will follow unless a change is made. One of the best judges of certain specialties, who lives in New England, was offered a sum of money to judge some very important classes at a most important show, that would not cover his railroad and hotel expenses. He is a man that could command large entries in classes that are rarely, if ever, well filled these days because he enjoys the confidence of all breeders of these varieties. Exhibitors that put up $1 and $2 per bird entry fees like to know where they are at. An inexperienced judge may be a clever enough breeder, but a warm class is usually too much for him and his "fads and fancies" that have fastened themselves on his judgment of his own stock, often play very "high jinks" when he is confronted with the real goods of the other fellows. The all-round judge or experienced specialist has learned to forget individual preferences and as a rule follows the Standard very closely. And that is the only correct way to judge a bird.

There is a crying need for more judges as shows have multiplied rapidly in the past few years and the supply of available judging timber is very small. There are plenty of capable young fanciers that would make good judges but who certainly can not afford to engage in a profession that lacks the necessary inducement in the shape of reward.

It is a wise man who buys his breeding stock before the additional winter cost of care and keep is added.

Proposed Changes in the Standard

In the first consideration of the proposed changes in the constitution and by-laws of the American Poultry Association, we pointed out the possibilities presented in these changes of laying upon the association the responsibility of a financial outlay which we scarcely believe any individual of the association would personally shoulder, provided it was to be guided and managed by those who would not have the least financial responsibility over and beyond the amount of funds in the treasury, and the possible increase of same through the selling of Standards and gaining of new members, except the individual responsibility of each member before the law.

The constitutional changes on page three of the circular issued, referring to the county branch, states as follows: "Where there are five or more life members of this association residents of the same county, they may, and it is their duty to organize a county branch of the American Poultry Association, with proper officers and authority for the holding of meetings, institutes and conventions, and exercising a general provision under the directions of this association over the fancy poultry interest of the country. This county branch may annually hold a county poultry show in connection with their county convention, all under the auspices and authority of the general association; then this branch shall turn over to the general association ten per ct. of the net receipts of the poultry show thus held and promoted. A county branch association shall be entitled to one representative to the meeting of the American Poultry Association for the fist ten life members in such a county branch, and for each five life members of the association thereafter enrolled in like manner." In other words, if there are twenty-five members in a county, these twenty-five members have their individual voting power, and in addition to this they get four other votes in the association because they belong to this organization. Or, if five men, members of the American Poultry Association, belong to twenty-five specialty clubs those five men have the possible power of casting thirty votes in a meeting in which they themselves were present, and holding credentials from the twenty-five specialty clubs in which they were mmbers. Evidently there was not due consideration given to this proposition when presented as recorded for the action of the association at the coming winter meeting.

This same proposition holds good, as above mentioned, throughout all classes of county branches, club membership, associate membership and the creation of committees of all kinds. In other words, if such a conglomeration of creating of votes be passed into the constitution and organization of the association it would simply disgrace and destroy whatever value the association has at the present time for being a benefit to the poultry growing of the country. It would simply turn the organization into a political convention that could be readily organized for any purpose whatever that might be the wish or desire of one or two very thoroughgoing politicians.

But the most terrible proposition of the whole is as follows: "The Executive Committee shall consist of the president, secretary-treasurer, advisory board, and ten life members of the association, to be chosen annually by a majority vote of the combined state-county club and association representatives assembled at the annual meeting of the association." In other words, the membership of the association turns over to the branch clubs and organizations the entire management of the association as the Executive Committee is created and made the absolute ruling power of the association in connection with the president, secretary and the advisory board, which is made up of ex-presidents of the association. This same article goes on to state that the annual meeting shall not be adjourned to any other locality or place at a later date. It also states that the Executive Committee present at the meeting in session shall decide the next place of holding the annual meeting of the association, and declares that no special meeting shall be called except by a majority vote of the Executive Committee.

It might be possible at a meeting place where but few were present for one single individual, who was a member of a dozen or more specialty clubs to hold an approved credential from all these, and with his own individual vote control the entire meeting and elect every officer and every member of the Executive Committee, without regard to the indivdual membership that might be present that did not muster a force equal to his credentials. Credentials and proxys always have been and always will be a nuisance in every meeting wherever they were permitted. If there is to be any change whatever in the manner of voting permit every member of the association individually to vote by mail.

On page seven of the Notice to Members, article 7, with reference to the admission of new breeds or varieties to the Standard, there is presented in the first lot of changes the following: "Before any breed or variety can be admitted to the Standard it must comply with the following requirements: It must be able to produce a satisfactory percentage of specimens reasonably true to the type and characteristics of the breed or variety as set out in the proposed standard." The balance of the petition has scarcely enough difference from the old or the present to call for controversy or criticism. But why should they place in this the paragraph "Produce a satisfactory percentage of specimens true to the type." What is a satisfactory percentage? The old or present law says that they shall produce more than fifty per ct. of the specimens true to the type and characteristic of the variety. If this has stood and been satisfactory for this length of time why should the association advocate retrogression and pull down the bars so as to admit more easily to the Standard nondescripts that are no credit either to the originator or the association?

Along these same lines Dr. B. J. Hill, of Akron, presents some changes which, if any change is needed, would be more than beneficial to the association, the organization and the good of standard-bred poultry than would be the other proposed change. The doctor presents a reiteration of the present statements in a more condensed form and rather stronger than the old, showing advancement and improvement. If we are to have changes at all in the constitution and by-laws, let us have them along the lines of improvement. If this article is to be changed at all, change it so that it will be more difficult to gain admission of breeds and varieties to the Standard, rather than to have it less difficult than ever before. If any one can advance a reasonable explanation for making eligible poorer quality than ever before, then it might be worthy of consideration. But so long as it is a questionable proposition, why destroy the one safeguard that the association has for protecting the purchasing public throughout the world.

Every member of the Poultry Association, every poultryman in the country should carefully study all these proposed changes to the constitution and by-laws. We believe that a large portion of the membership consider the present constitution that admits of club associations and other memberships to vote by proxy a mistake. To add to this unreasonable disadvantage would be foolish. To deprive any, now members, of their membership would be improper; to go on adding incumbrances to the work of the association to the disadvantage of every one and everything should not be considered.

We do not believe the time is at hand when the salary of the secretary-treasurer of the American Poultry Association should be raised to $500 per year. We know that there are at least a hundred members in the association thoroughly equipped, perfectly willing and able to do all the work demanded of a secretary-treasurer for the present salary of $300. For some reason there is a restless feeling and a disposition upon the part of some to increase the salary to $500. This might be done, but it is to be hoped that the association will not enter into any obligations, the fulfilling of which will cost more every five years than will be the possible profit from all resources in sight, even though ten thousand Standards should be sold every five years for replenishing the treasury depleted by the extravagant management of its membership.

Let us add by the way of prophecy an opinion created through fear that has come from the careful study of the management of the association for six years, and that is that the next meeting will add burdens to the association that will prove detrimental to its future. Compare the management, the extravagance, the work accomplished and the influential standing of the present day association with that of twenty-five years ago, and see if there is a single member in the association that can stand up and point with pride to the comparison. Scarcely anything has been done of reasonable business consideration, and hundreds of things have been done that any careful business man would not allow for twenty hours within a concern that belonged to himself and he could control.

The Great Lititz, Pa., Show

The third annual poultry and pigeon show will be held in Rudy's Hall, Lititz, Pa., December 26 to 30, 1905. From present indications this will be the biggest show held in the big Keystone State this winter. The list of specials includes a new incubator, three silver cups and eighty cash specials. One of the cups is the Geo. W. Webb cup for the best display of bantams. Lititz also offers the Pennsylvania State silver cup, given by the American White Plymouth Club for the best display of White Plymouth Rocks. Messrs. Stanton, Cornman and Bean will place the awards. A new feature of the Lititz Show will be a banquet given on Wednesday evening, December 27, for the association members, exhibitors and visiting poultrymen. J. W. Bruckart, of Lititz, Pa., is the secretary, and will furnish premium lists.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND

By John Wharton

The Thirty-seventh Great National Poultry, Pigeon and Rabbit Show was held at the Crystal Palace, November 4 to 10. As regards the poultry section of this great fixture it may truly be said that it was a most representative one, and far in advance of the past two or three years, while in management it was certainly the best we ever attended. The entries were: Poultry, some thirty-three hundred; pigeons, forty-eight hundred and fifty, and some four hundred rabbits. This may not seem a very large entry but when we consider that the International Show was held on the same dates at the Alexandria Palace, London, with an entry of 4,749 in poultry and 1,473 in pigeons we begin to wonder where all the exhibits came from.

The secretary of the Crystal Palace, since the death of Mr. Howard, has been Mr. Charles Holt, and this year he was ably backed up by Mr. Edwardson, of Birkenhead-show fame, and other well-known fanciers. Such a large undertaking requires a clear head and in the above gentlemen we have the right captains for such a gigantic show. Everything was done that could be done for the birds' comfort. One thing that was certainly an improvement was the commencement of the show on Tuesday instead of Monday, which enabled fanciers to go down with their exhibits on Monday instead of having to spend Sunday in London, as on previous years. The judges this year numbered twenty-six for poultry, the same number for pigeons and five for rabbits.

There are always a large number of exhibitors from the North of England, and it is always noticeable that a larger percentage of prizes go North than stay in the South. It was a beautiful morning when I boarded the train with my exhibits to proceed to St. Pancras en route to the Crystal Palace. At every stopping-place we were joined by others until when we reached St. Pancras the railway station was fairly alive with fanciers. The scene when we arrived at the Glass House, as many call the Palace, was very similar to what we have seen there many a time. Every one was soon busy unloading the birds and carrying them into the Palace. All the pens were ready to receive them and throughout all was carried on in a businesslike way. Things were done quickly, but there was no bustle.

All was ready for the judges to commence their duties early on Tuesday morning, and by 3 p. m. every bird had got all it was to have at the Crystal Palace for 1905. It is unnecessary to say that the quality was high. Few bad birds ever see the Crystal Palace. Visit the Crystal Palace and you see the cream of the poultry yards of England.

Polish had four classes, but only sixteen entries were made and fully half of them were from the Continent. Orpingtons came up strong, twenty-three Black cocks and thirty hens faced the judge, and a very difficult job he had to divide them. Buffs had forty-six cocks and fifty-two hens. Truly a show by themselves, and many a good bird had to be content with a V. H. C. Whites had thirteen cocks and fourteen hens, some really good birds being among them. Jubilee turned up eight in the cock and ten in the hen class. Spangles had only six cocks and five hens.

Scotch Dumpies had two classes alloted but they only raised four entries. Houdans mustered seven cocks, nine hens, twelve cockerels and eleven pullets—not a very large show for such a one-time popular variety. Minorcas had a splendid show for quality, ten cocks and thirteen hens, seventeen cockerels and eleven pullets, Messrs. Whitaker & Tootill winning the challenge trophy with their magnificent cockerel.

Leghorns, all single-combed (as the rose-combed are not recognized in England), turned up fairly well. Brown cocks, seven; hens, ten. White cocks, ten; hens, thirteen. Blacks, which have made great headway during the last two years, fifteen cocks and twenty hens. Buffs competed among Pyles and Duckwings, the cock class being headed by a beautiful Silver Duckwing, and the hen class by a good Buff.

Wyandottes were a splendid collection and the judge, Mr. Stainthorp, had a difficult task before him in relegating them to their proper places. One thing at the Crystal Palace, there is always a good light if it be a clear day, which is a great help to judging. Silver cocks had thirteen entries and were led by a new face, owned by Mr. Bates, one of our most-respected Wyandotte fanciers. Hens, fifteen; Mr. C. Preston winning with a beautiful pullet, upon which you could not find a mismarked feather. Gold cocks had thirteen and a noble bird of rare lacing qualities, with the bright top and wing we like to see, won for Mr. T. Heath the Challenge Trophy. During late years there has been a tendency to encourage dark-topped birds which I have always condemned. Hens, twelve; again won by Mr. Heath with a beautiful bird. Partridges had four classes. Cocks had seven entries, hens ten, cockerels twenty and pullets nine. There were also two novice classes for Partridges and these brought together twenty-three cocks and sixteen hens. Whites also had four classes and their entries were cocks, sixteen; hens, eighteen; cockerels, sixteen, and pullets, sixteen. Many rare-quality birds were shown, large and white as driven snow, with good yellow legs. Silver-penciled had two classes, and thirteen cocks and ten hens faced the judge. Columbians had six cocks and eight hens. The hens were fair, but the cocks were very poor indeed.

Plymouth Rocks were a fine collection and were judged by Mr. J. Wilkinson. Barred cocks numbered ten, hens also ten, cockerels twenty-three, pullets twenty-five. Buffs had only eight cockerels and eleven pullets, but quality was very good. Whites had seven cocks and ten hens of decent quality.

Silkies had four classes with a total entry of thirty-nine birds. A surprise was here created by a beginner winning almost all that was worth having, including two cups. Andalusians had two classes with eleven cocks and twelve hens. The quality was good but no new names appear among the exhibitors. Assell had two classes with the poor entry of only thirteen. Dorkings turned up very nicely, but not as we remember them some years ago. The classes numbered eight and the entries were forty-six. The Silver-gray turned up best and the Whites worst, only four of the latter being on exhibition—a sure sign that this variety is dying out of public favor.

Cochins were a grand lot for quality. Mr. Proctor, the mayor of Durham, won both cock and hen classes with noble specimens in the Buff varieties. The entries were: Cocks, seven; hens, five; partridge cocks, nine; hens, ten. The other two classes given contained both Blacks and Whites to the number of ten. Brahmas had eight classes which contained one hundred and five birds of the choicest quality—many of the best birds had been catalogued at prices that had they been Wyandottes, Rocks or Orpingtons would soon have found them new owners, but Brahmas are not making big prices just now. Langshans had four classes which had six cocks, eight hens, fourteen cockerels and thirteen pullets. Many fine birds were among them, but we understand there is no demand only for a few of the best. One of the leading breeders told me at the show that before another season he would have done with Langshans for ever and be a Wyandotte breeder. No doubt the length of leg has been the stumbling-block of the breed. Capines had two classes and twenty-one entries while Lakenfelders had four classes and thirty entries. Little or no improvement is visible, in fact I dispute if they are as good as those imported from the Continent some few years ago. I feel certain that I have seen better over there than what are exhibited here now. Anconas, too, had four classes with forty-two entries, three out of the four firsts going to one exhibitor. This breed is more fixed than ever before, but it can not be said to be a popular breed.

In addition to the above classes nearly each variety had its selling class or classes at all prices from £2 to £5. There was also a good entry of breeding pens, or supposed breeding pens, at a fixed price of from £5 to £15 the pen of three birds. We noticed several of these pens were sold. We wish their buyers luck with their purchases. In the selling classes also brisk trade was done. The sale office window never was clear of some one wanting to purchase such and such a pen. In this way many rare bargains are picked up and no doubt both buyer and seller are satisfied.

Bantams had a splendid classification, and they turned up in force between eight hundred and a thousand. It is needless to say the best midgets in the country were there. We heard the winning Rose-combed cockered was sold for £5—$250—and many others changed hands at good prices. There always appears to be good trade among the bantam fanciers, who are a real jolly set of fellows.

Ducks were represented by over two hundred exhibits of the highest quality. The Indian Runner ducks were a treat, Mr. Digby showing a grand train and doing a lot of winning with some really choice birds. Fancy ducks were well represented by some choice specimens of the less known varieties.

Turkeys were not large in number, but they were monstrous in size. Pigeons were legion and great interest was displayed throughout among their supporters.

The only novelties we noticed were some Partridge and Silver-penciled Wyandotte Bantams, which were really a good start in these new varieties—nothing seems too great for a bantam breeder to accomplish. Appliances of every conceivable kind, both useful and ridiculous, were on view. Incubators in full work, breeders with their chickens, etc.

Taking into consideration the opposition of the International Show, we must say the thirty-seventh show of the Crystal Palace Poultry Show was a decided success, and we trust another year those two mammoth shows won't clash.

Some Funny Kinks

BY G. W. HIZZ.

He and his Wife decided to Make Money on Poultry. She went in for Setting Hens. He Laughed At her, called her "Old-Fashioned," and went in for Incubators. He bought a Dedsure Incubator and put Four Hundred Eggs in it at a Cost of $35. She selected Ten Broody Old Hens and put One Hundred and Fifty Eggs under them at a cost of $1.75. He sat up Nights, with the Machine, watching it, regulating it, testing for Fertility, turning the Contraption, and following Directions according to the Worst of his Inability. She went to Bed and slept well, leaving her Old Hens to Look Out for the Eggs. On Exit Day he cackled over the issue of One Hundred Chicks. She said nothing, but he counted her chicks and was Chagrined to find that she had One Hundred and Twenty Fine, Vigorous Fluffs, and he Offered to Trade her his incubator for her Ten Old Hens. She snapped up the Bargain. The next Season Three Hundred and Ninety Chicks ran out. He put One Hundred and Fifty Eggs under the Ten Old Hens and Fifteen Chicks come out. He was Disgusted and said: "Well! Poultrying isn't a Man's Work, any way!" Moral: Man that is Born of Woman has no show to know as Much as his Mother, and he is an Egotistic Man who would try to Teach his Grandmother to Suck Eggs. or to Set them Either.—Exchange.

BROWN'S BUDGET

Exercise means warmth, increased circulation and good health. Scratching sheds opening to the south, and good, dry leaves or short straw or corn husks are almost indispensable factors for winter egg production.

Some makers of leg bands stamp the year on them. It is an excellent idea as it enables poultrymen to keep each year's stock separate and to easily select certain aged specimens when it is desired to do so. It is always preferable to keep fowls of the same age in one flock. With such management the owner can control the feeling.

In the near future the unusually heavy over standard-weight specimens will be a rarity at the shows and in the poultry yards. Such specimens are indifferent breeders, the hens are poor layers and all in a marked degree become "off" in typical shape. You can not force nature without a penalty.

Belong to a specialty club. They have accomplished as much in making pure-bred poultry popular as the poultry press.

High-class specimens of dressed poultry always command paying prices. Two considerations should never be lost sight of where top prices are expected. One is uniformity in size and appearance of the dressed specimens, the other is neat and attractive packing. Both of these things are great factors in interesting the best class of customers.

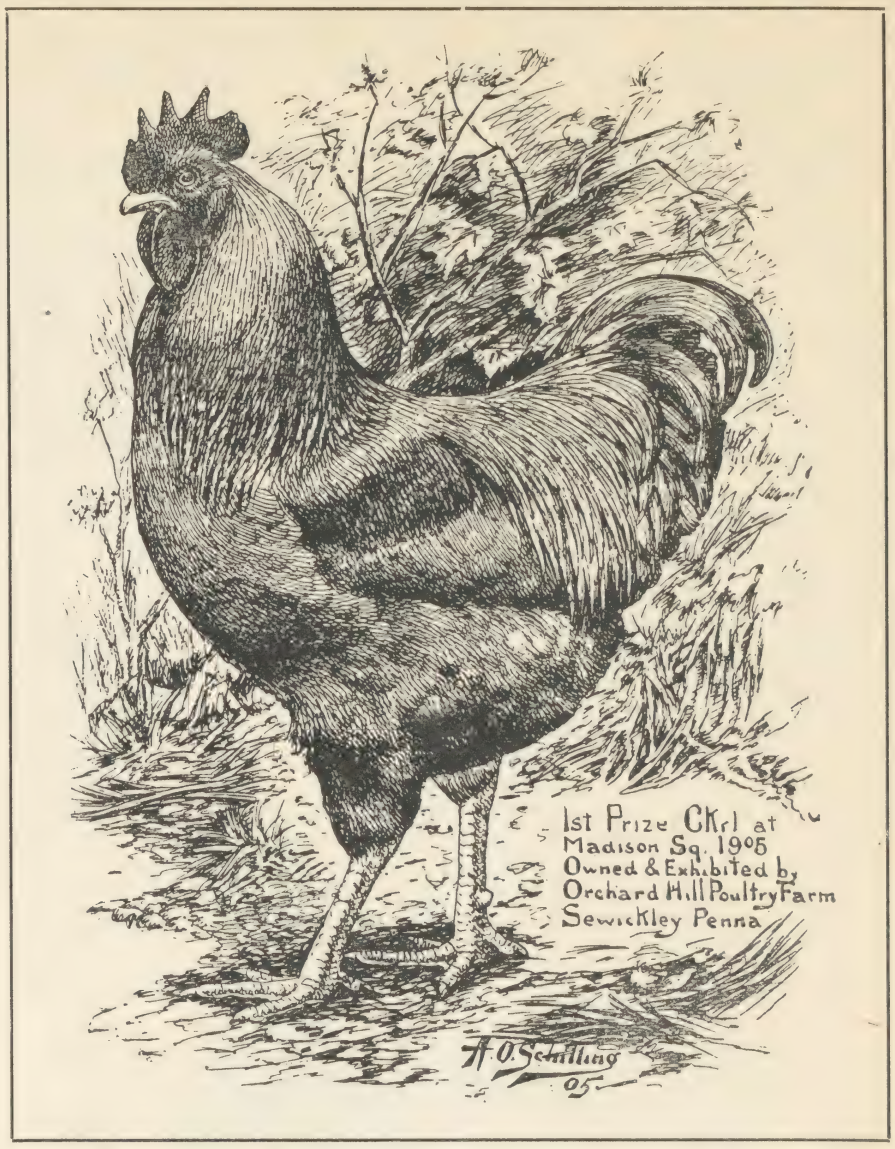
When you have several specimens of either sex that are more promising than the rest of the broods of growing chicks, it will pay to give them extra care. Put each sex in some suitable run and see that they have a chance to improve. Feed them at regular times, varying the diet as much as possible. Don't feed at any time more than they will partake of with keen relish. Make them work for a portion of their food supply every day.

In winter you can not expect a good supply of eggs if you neglect to supply the proper kind of drinking water. Ice cold or water pans with ice around the edges and with a space broken open so the hens can get at the water will not do. When freezing weather prevails provide warm water several times a day. Each time throw out the water as soon as the flock have satisfied their thirst. If you have regular periods for giving them water they will be "regular drinkers" and will get "on to" your methods.

The number of specialty clubs that will meet this winter at the Madison Square Poultry Show plainly indicates that fanciers appreciate the prestige of this great show. Fanciers will always be indebted to Secretary Crawford. His methods of conducting poultry shows has helped build up and disseminate the great industry of poultry raising. It has increased the so-called fancy and commercial interests.

It is a good omen to note that the term "fancy" poultry is becoming obsolete. The proper term "pure bred" is replacing it. American poultrymen, while they are ardent fanciers of any of the respective breeds they may keep, yet at the same time they want something of more value than mere beauty. Hence the evolving of the wonderfully popular American breeds that combine both beauty and utility.

Have any of the readers of the Budget had any experience with keeping eggs any period of time in so-called water glass? The writer would like to hear from any such.



The fact that there is often such a radical difference in the laying of fowls of the same breed should not, as too often it is, be a reason for declaring such a breed are not good layers. The fact is, the real trouble is the men behind the flocks. Proper methods have not been observed in selection or weeding out. Two-hundred-egg hens have not been evolved by haphazard methods.

Too many cooks spoil the broth. Too many advisers confuse the novice in poultry raising. If he strictly followed the advice of all he reads he would have to keep a good drug-store supply of nostrums on hand and a food supply as varied as a "curiosity shop." The fact is that common sense must be a prominent denominator in poultry keeping and the man who always has a good supply of common sense wins.

There should be much less difference in poultry judges about standard ideals. The great trouble is some judges put up an ideal of their own when they are judging. You hear them say: "I don't like such a shape as that; now my ideal is so and so." A poultry judge has no business to have any ideal if it differs from the Standard. The judge who explains to exhibitors what the Standard ideal is will seldom go wrong in his information or awards. When judging fowls is a poor time for a man to air his individual likes or dislikes or give expression to prejudice.

The man who doesn't get well acquainted with the birds he intends to exhibit at the poultry shows will find his specimens handicapped. Coop your birds, talk to them, handle them gently so they will become tame and have confidence that they are not to be hurt. Then when they get in the show-room they will come to the front fearlessly and put on their best appearance. A cowed or frightened bird never shows how really good quality he may be.

Scaly legs on poultry is a very unsightly thing to see. Many a fine specimen loses a chance of becoming a winner on account of the inexcusable condition of the legs. As soon as there is any indication of scale the legs should be anointed with vaselin and sulphur. In the early stages diluted coal oil rubbed in with a tooth brush generally effects a cure. It is a crime to allow the scale to develop to the degree it is sometimes allowed, too.

BUFF PLYMOUTH ROCK

Which Are Most Profitable, June or January Eggs?

Some poultrymen claim the summer eggs pay the best because the hens require no extra care at that time to get eggs. Others say that fall and winter eggs are most profitable because of the high prices paid at that time. The difference in prices between June and January is not as much as it used to be before the cold-storage houses came into use. The demand for storage eggs brought up the summer prices and placing the storage eggs on the market in winter lowered the prices at that time. The question is, Will hens on the farm lay enough during the summer under ordinary care to make them profitable for the year if they lay no eggs in the winter? In order to make them profitable will it not be necessary to give them some extra care even in the summer?

My hens did remarkably well all summer. Many of them laid more or less right through the month, but they were also well fed and cared for all summer. Some of the extras, such as cut bone, cabbage, etc., were not given them, but the extra cost of this stuff for winter is not much and then I have more time to feed it, so there is not much difference on this score.

On the kind of a house depends something about the profit of winter eggs. There is no use throwing away food to a lot of hens in an old, leaky and cold henhouse, thinking to get a profitable egg yield. Some have the idea that it is useless to try and make Leghorns lay in winter. It is if they are not well cared for, and so it is with any fowl. My idea is that it pays to work for winter eggs and if you take care of the flock so they are profitable as winter layers it is quite likely they will lay some in June as well as in January.—V. M. Couch.

Rations for Laying Hens

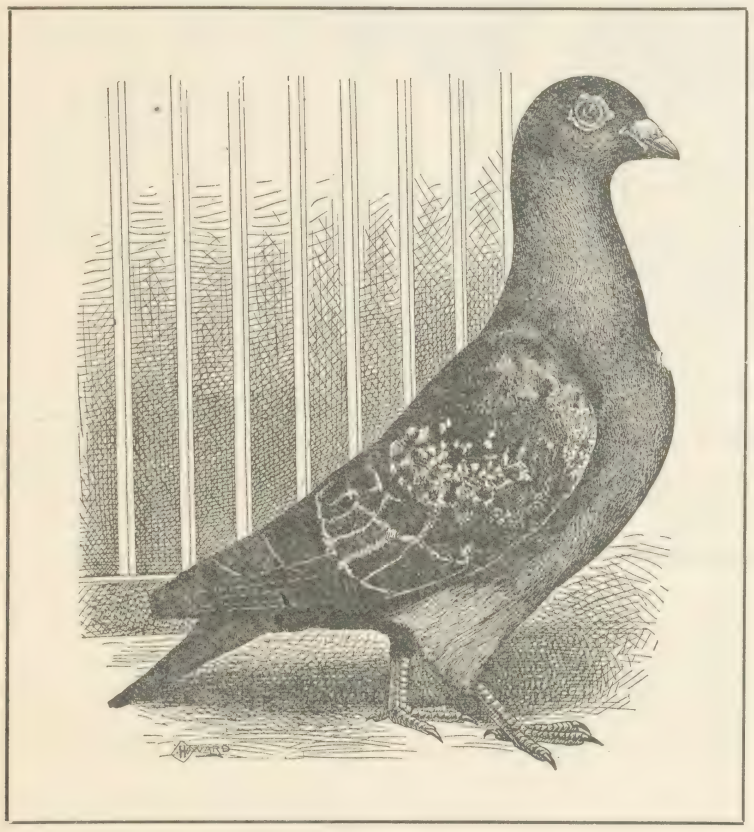
The time for naming the best ration for the laying hens is at hand. One that amuses us appeared a short time ago in one of the best farm journals. It reads as follows: "A good egg ration is half wheat and the other half bran and shorts mixed up with skim milk. Some meat scraps or green cutbone, two or three ounces per fowl weekly, will wonderfully improve this ration, also a little cornmeal in the mash." We presume that the informant intends to teach us that hens fed one meal of wheat each day, or in other words, that one-half of the food each day for the laying hens should be good, sound, well-grown wheat; the other half of the ration should be bran and shorts in equal proportion, mixed with boiled skim milk; each hen to have two or three ounces of cut green bone per week, and that a little ground cornmeal may be added to the bran and shorts mash to advantage. We would recommend rather a different style of feed. Have your grain mixed three-fourths wheat, the other fourth to consist of cracked corn, oats and perhaps a little millet seed. This grain mixture is to be fed night and morning. At noon a mash composed of equal parts of ground oats and wheat, bran middlings and cornmeal by measure should be fed. This mash is to contain some cut green bone or granulated beef scrap or meat of some kind to the amount of half an ounce per day for each day, the entire mixture to be partially cooked or boiled, either through mixing with boiling hot water or boiling hot skim milk. This manner of feeding is accepted as among the very best for egg production. If some little buckwheat, Kafir corn and other small grains are mixed into the grain, keeping the proportion of one-half wheat in the entire mixture, the change may be beneficial to the hens.

WEIGHT OF MARKET SQUABS

In writing of the weight of squabs one of considerable experience in the West states that he doubts very much the possibility of producing squabs that average twelve pounds to the dozen, claiming that nine pounds is equal to, if not above the average.

This same writer counsels the employment of large, vigorous, non-related parent stock of the Homer variety, urging the necessity of using large-sized, vigorous hens. He admits that some squabs are grown from Runt parents which weigh sixteen ounces each, but maintains that even with that breed such an average can not be attained. He goes further and states that there is no cardinal rule or system that will guarantee profitable results from the squab culture, other than prolonging experience and attention to the same.

If the writer of this will journey to Allentown, Pa., we believe that he will find a plant there that does produce on the average many hundred pairs per year that average fully sixteen ounces and over when sent to market. We might also call his attention to the same locality where will be found squabs from Homers that average over nine pounds to the dozen from over one thousand pairs.



But this is the result obtained after many years of care and experience in selecting the Runts and the Homer pigeons as well, for the production of squabs. Large hen pigeons in any variety will produce large, thrifty squabs.

There are other features demanded for success in growing squabs for market. There are many kinds and varieties that will produce large, healthy squabs. We are preparing for an early issue of The Feather information on these larger breeds or varieties of pigeons used for squab growing. We intend going into every detail and condition of same so as to inform the readers of The Feather as to the possibilities to be gained from these pigeons, and the difficulties to overcome in the handling of them.

We notice in The Squab Bulletin a clipping from an Iowa paper that mentions the astounding fact that pigeons have produced squabs that sold at auction at seventy-five cents a pair, and that these squabs find a ready sale at fifty cents a pair, and that the breeding stock will produce ten or eleven pairs per year. It is to be lamented that there is not more information on this point within the editorial offices of current publications, for thousands of dollars have been lost by the readers of such papers, who are misled by statements of this kind in which there is no foundation. If those who issue the papers knew the real facts we scarcely think it would be possible for such misleading statements to become current.

The Produce Review of New York City calls attention to the fact that raising squabs has materially increased during the past few years, the proportion of very large squabs produced rapidly increasing, and yet there is not enough to supply the demand. The greater portion of the squabs received average from six to six and one-half pounds per dozen. When seven and eight pounds to the dozen squabs are received in the market they realize from fifty cents to $1 per dozen over the six-pound stock. A few very large ten- to twelve-pound dozens arrive and go to the fancy trade at high prices; and there are a few received which weigh up to one and a quarter pounds each. Such are in great demand and bring fabulous prices.

This states conditions as they really exist. Those who are able to produce large and heavy-weight squabs gain a great profit from them. Those who produce the six and six and one-half pound squabs lose money on them. The most profitable are those ranging from nine to eleven pounds per dozen. It is almost a waste of time to produce the six-pound quality; very profitable to produce from Homers the nine- to eleven-pound kind, and it is possible to reap a greater profit from the heavier kind, when once you become familiar with and are competent to handle and grow them. Do not rush madly into the larger kinds; go slow and gain the experience.

The private family egg trade by poultrymen located near large cities and towns is becoming quite a prominent industry. Pure-food eggs from hens kept in a sanitary manner is another production that doctors are giving attention to for typhoid fever patients. The wide-awake poultryman can always find a market for his products, and at prices that mean real profit, too.

Fattening Water-fowls

As winter approaches fatten and send to market all the young ducks that you will not need for next year's breeding purposes; also fatten and send to market every duck you own that is past two years old. It never pays to keep either the ducks or the turkeys into the third year. Ducks in their second year and drakes from ten to thirty months of age are the best for breeding purposes. The cultivation of ducks upon the farm for market purposes and the growing of geese for the same use is becoming more prevalent every year. Those who hope to gain the most profit and do the best should never keep their breeding stock beyond a profitable period, nor should they send to market very old ducks or geese. Never send your ducks or geese to market unless they are thoroughly fattened before selling them.

All kinds of water-fowls can be confined for a few weeks in a small, clean, dry enclosure and pen-fattened, as it is called, into fine market condition. A duck or a goose can be made very fat for market, provided that it holds its shape and does not belly down in the abdomen into unnatural shape. The writer was offered in the best wholesale-retail market in New York last Christmas season the choice of two geese, one plump, round and smooth in formation, at thirty cents per pound; the other equally attractive except that it was unnaturally heavy in the abdomen. This was offered at nineteen cents per pound. The difference of eleven cents was the result of appearance alone. This example teaches us that water-fowls sent to market are graded in value largely from appearance. They can not be too fat, as stated above, as long as they hold their proper formation.

During the late fall and early winter the young, growing geese should have one full meal every day. Geese and ducks to do their best should always be fed in troughs or boxes a mixture of meals or ground grains, moistened with hot water or hot milk to a consistency that might be termed dampness—not thoroughly wet nor dry. When the time comes for fattening this should consist largely of mixed ground meals of the most fattening character; during the growing period one-third oats, cornmeal and bran each is the best proportion.

Martin's White Wyandottes won more prizes than any other exhibitor. First and Third Cockerel, First and Third Pullet, Second Cock, Second Hen and Second Pen. This was a remarkable win, owing to the fact that previous to this show they had been cooped nearly two weeks at the Toronto Show, and thus were not in as good condition as the birds they competed with.

Another New Prairie State Improvement

The Fresh Air Incubator

Fresh air is absolutely essential to success in the rearing of strong, vigorous birds, as proven by the open front poultry house, so popular among progressive poultrymen. It's just as essential in the hatching of healthy, robust chicks. To properly supply fresh air to the germinating egg has been the problem in artificial incubation for years—the lack of sufficient fresh air the cause of the failure of so many incubators to make good. We call our STANDARD PRAIRIE STATE INCUBATOR the "FRESH AIR INCUBATOR," because in it we have actually solved the fresh air question, and are raising the healthiest, hardiest, brightest-eyed chicks you ever saw hatched by machinery. Our new FREE STANDARD PRAIRIE STATE INCUBATOR catalog explains how we do it—tells all about the open bottom—why it's better. Write today—read reasons.

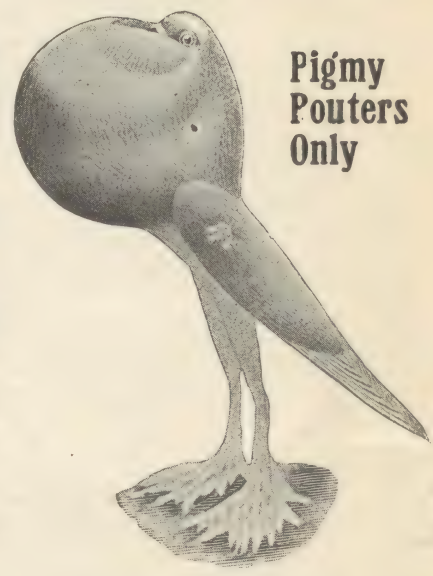
Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts



At the Great Hagerstown Show, the Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts, on twenty-four entries, was awarded 10 firsts (out of a possible 11 firsts), 5 seconds, 2 thirds, 3 fourths, 3 fifths, and special for best bird in show.

All Bred in Line from the Finest American and English Winners

Among the Pigmy Pouters are some imported specimens and their young, all of which are most valuable breeding stock. Have them in all colors.

To clear my lofts of some superfluous stock, will dispose of a few valuable birds at less than one-half their value. Shall be glad to have either Edward S. Schmid or Joseph Baldroff select from my stock for any purchaser.

The quality is here. The opportunity for such purchase does not often present itself.

My strain, again for the 5th consecutive year, shows its superiority by winning more prizes at Madison Square Garden, New York, than all others combined, including cup, medal and four specials. Two weeks later I showed at Boston against the most prominent breeders of the East, winning nine prizes on nine entries over birds that won 1st at St. Louis.

I showed 2 Cocks, won 1st, 2d; I showed 2 Hens, won 1st, 2d
I showed 2 Ckrls., won 1st, 2d; I showed 2 P'l'ts, won 1st, 2d
I showed 1 Breeding Pen, won 1st

Also four specials. This record has never been equaled by any other breed or breeder in America. Stock for sale at all times. One hundred of this year's breeding hens for sale to make room for young stock. Address 4

Editorial Gossip

The entries closed for New York last Friday with most flattering results. New York will have at Madison Square Garden the first week in January one of the grandest exhibits of poultry, pigeons and pet stock ever gathered within the four walls of that time-honored building.

Next comes Boston with its great possibilities for the gaining of large values in regular and special cash prizes, cups, medals and other articles of great value. We are just in receipt of a letter from Samuel H. Roberts, secretary, South Attleboro, Mass., that states: "Entries coming in very satisfactory. Tell the readers of The American Fancier, if any of them have been overlooked, to please send a postal card requesting same, and a copy of the Boston Show premium list will be sent them at once." Entries to the great Boston Show close Thursday, December 28. There is time enough yet to secure a premium list and send your entries in.

Poultry—W. B. Atherton, Henry S. Ball, H. Bumford, Light Brahmas; Sharp Butterfield, W. H. Card, Polish and Water-fowl; Geo. P. Coffin, R. I. Reds; Chas. T. Cornman, Games and Game Bantams; J. T. Cothran, Hamburgs; W. C. Denney, Buff Wyandottes, Buff Plymouth Rocks; Geo. V. Fletcher, W. R. Graves, White Wyandottes; H. J. Manley, Partridge and Columbian Wyandottes; H. B. May, Barred Plymouth Rocks; T. F. McGrew, D. A. Nichols, Cochins and Cochin Bantams; Geo. H. Northup, S. C. Minorcas; R. Oke, Orpingtons, Langshans, Andalusians; C. E. Petersen, Houdans; C. Wheeler, Silver-penciled Wyandottes; A. Theo. Wittman, Leghorns; Philander Williams. Pigeons—Sam'l Johnson, Fantails; A. D. Brown, Pouters, Pigmy Pouters; F. W. Gorse, Oriental Frills; H. E. Johnson, Owls, Turbits; J. J. Dutra, Clean-leg Tumblers; F. L. Weston, Muffled Tumblers, L. W. Annis, Working Homers; A. H. Dresser, Dragoons, Show Homers; R. D. Craft, C. E. Twombly, Cage Birds; M. The Connecticul Board of Agriculture held their annual midsummer meeting at Williamantic, Connecticut, December 13 and 14. Wednesday, the 13th, was largely devoted to poultry. Mr. Tillinghast, of Vernon, Connecticut, the originator of the great twentieth century plan of feeding poultry as set forth and illustrated in the December issue of The Feather, edified the audience for an hour and fifteen minutes, explaining his methods to them. We predict that in the near future Mr. Tillinghast's plan will be thoroughly tested at the agricultural college, Storres, Connecticut, by the professor of poultry, Mr. C. K. Graham, who has become most popular in that section of the country.

Following Mr. Tillinghast, the balance of the morning was taken up by Mr. A. F. Hunter, with a demonstration of the values of dry feeding, the new poultry culture. Mr. Hunter's years of experience fits him for a thorough demonstration of the feeding of poultry for the best results possible to be gained from the production of market eggs and dressed poultry of all kinds. Mr. Hunter gave the audience the benefit not only of his own research, but the statements and experiences of others who have been successful.

The afternoon was taken up by Mr. T. F. McGrew, whose subject was "The Origin and Development of Poultry from the Beginning to the Present Time." The large Opera House was filled with attentive listeners throughout the entire period of the poultry meeting. The question of pure foods was gone over and considered. The most prominent feature brought out during the day was the consensus of opinion that the greatest success in market poultry would continue, to a larger extent than ever before, to come to those who grow the best market poultry and the most attractive eggs for market.

Vice-president Edwin G. Seeley and Secretary James F. Brown seem to have the confidence of the agricultural people of the state of Connecticut. Their selection of men from Boston to St. Paul to address these meetings shows conclusively their determination to furnish the best information possible to the interested thousands who attend these meetings. The Town Hall of Williamantic was a most attractive spot during last week to all able to attend the interesting meetings.

The Rural New-Yorker in a recent issue illustrates from photographs the pictures of actual producers of a large number of eggs in a single year. These illustrations are presented to show the possible formation of the laying hen. The most attractive of all these and the one that we would have selected as the greatest egg-producer, is 405. We can not imagine that any one would select 403 as a great egg-producer; 406 has the best general make-up of the Leghorns presented.

We have received some drawings of buildings recently erected by Dr. Phelps. of Glenns Falls, N. Y. These drawings reached us too late to be made use of in our next issue of The Feather, the whole plan of the paper having been arranged prior to the coming of these illustrations. Dr. Phelphs is one of the most enthusiastic poultrymen in the country, and his recent effort at the construction of a valuable poultry house has helped considerably to the solution of the problem of caring for hens during the winter months.

We notice by a recent issue of The Connecticut Farmer that the new state organization there had found as an inheritance from the old state organization an indebtedness of $1,300. While it was thought that the reorganization could not be held for the indebtedness of the old organization, a legal committee was appointed to investigate the matter before the new would take the responsibility of facing the troubles of years ago. Poultry organizations without legal status and individual responsibility should become a thing of the past.

In the turning up of the history of the old Connecticut association, the statement was made that the original Standard of this country was issued by the old Connecticut State Society as a leaflet. We have before us the American Standard of Excellence, as adopted by the American, the New England, the Pennsylvania, and the state of Connecticut poultry societies, and compiled and published by A. M. Halstead; entered according to Act of Congress the year 1867, by A. M. Halstead, in the clerk's office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York. If there is any one that has an earlier issue than this, the writer would like very much indeed to have a copy or two. Whether earlier than this or not, we should like to have a copy of the Connecticut State Leaflet referred to above.

The January issue of The Feather goes to press promptly the 26th of December. No issue of the American Fancier goes out the week of December 25-30. The next issue of The American Fancier following this will be dated January 6, and may contain some of the New York Show reports. If the readers of The American Fancier would thoroughly acquaint themselves with the fact that The American Fancier is issued forty weeks in the year, and The Feather the other twelve weeks, they would avoid the unnecessary trouble of wondering why The Fancier does not come that week. One dollar per year brings to your home regularly once a week the greatest poultry papers in the world for clear, valuable information and profitable advertising. Please take notice of the above statement as to the issue of this paper.

No publication neglects to present the fact that the roosts and dropping boards should be kept exquisitely clean during every week and month of the year, but there does not seem to be an equal determination on the part of all to emphasize the absolute necessity not only of cleanliness about the roosts and the dropping boards, but the nests as well. In fact, every crack and crevice, every portion of the ceiling, side walls and floors, including the roosts, dropping boards and nest-boxes should be kept absolutely clean, as demanded for poultry. This does not mean like the bedroom and parlor of your home, but it means a condition of cleanliness that will protect the poultry from disease and vermin. Roosts comfortable for occupation during the entire night must absolutely prohibit the presence of insects upon or about them. The nest-boxes and litter therein should be absolutely free from dirt and insect vermin and of such a condition of cleanliness as to prevent the eggs from becoming soiled and reduced in value thereby. The walls, cracks and crevices of the floor of the poultry-house should be sufficiently clean to obliterate the presence of insect vermin, dirt and dampness; the whole house, in fact, must be of that condition of cleanliness as not to be obnoxious to visitors or unpleasant to the poultry.

Poultry may be fattened for family use greatly to the advantage of the quality of same. Every farmer, every person living in a small town or village lot can build the A-shaped or V-shaped coop, as it is called, one-half of which can be closely covered with boards, the other half made with slats. Two or three hens or male birds can be confined in one of these coops and fed rich, fattening foods for a week, ten days or two weeks, until they make much better table poultry than they would have been previous to passing through this process. These coops may be lightly constructed without a bottom or floor, so that it can be shifted and moved about each day, furnishing a clean, dry spot for a floor each twenty-four hours for the fowls confined therein. A cloth of some kind can be thrown over the top as protection from the rain or frost. Try these kinds of coops a few times and see if you do not benefit therefrom.

The great winter show of Canada, held at Guelph, Ontario, last week, in quantity and quality, was one of the best, if not the best, ever held on the American continent. There were thirty-three hundred and seventy single entries in poultry and four hundred entries in pigeons, a remarkable showing.

The management was excellent, as might be expected when Dr. A. W. Bell is in charge. The birds were ready for the judges at 8 a. m. the first day of the show. It took the ten judges until noon of the second day to finish their work, and every judge had to be busy every minute to get his awards and specials up in the allotted time.

The judges were selected by the Ontario Poultry Association with the distinct purpose of getting men qualified to handle the varieties they were to pass upon. What these judges were expected to pass upon was printed in the premium list, and exhibitors were not kept on the anxious seat as to what Tom, Dick, or Harry was to handle their classes.

The building was especially erected for the purpose of exhibiting live stock, the ground floor being devoted to cattle, sheep and swine, the upper floor to poultry, pet stock and pigeons. Notwithstanding the great floor space and coop room, they were crowded to the limit, double tiering and doubling up of birds being necessary in order to accommodate the great entry. As Dr. Bell expressed it: "The Ontario has grown by leaps and bounds." The indications are that a larger building will be necessary to accommodate the exhibits in 1906. The light in the building is very good, being from the top and sides. The aisles are wide and the classification perfect. The clerks were young men from the agricultural college at Guelph, and were extremely obliging, painstaking and efficient. The card system of entry, award and amount won by each exhibitor is the simplest and best we ever saw. It does away with bookkeeping and red tape, and as a time-saver is without a peer. Secretary Westervelt and Dr. Bell are entitled to the credit of managing this new system, and other associations will do well to copy it. It's a winner.

The attendance at the show was great. People came hundreds of miles to see the cattle, sheep, swine and poultry, and attended the lectures held every evening on subjects related to the latter. The Hon. Wm. McNeil was in his glory when he addressed the chicken men at a meeting held Tuesday evening, December 12. He spoke in a happy and convincing manner and incidentally cracked a few jokes at the expense of some of the fanciers present. "Billy" McNeil is evidently the star ruler of poultrydom in Western Canada.

The Duke of Windsor, Sharp Butterfield, was another imposing figure at the show, but kept the writer of these notes company at the Hotel Wellington, instead of going around lecturing on poultry. As Sharp expressed it: "Why should a man tell in five minutes what it took him a lifetime to learn?" The Bismarck of the fancy has lost none of his cunning and ability, and his remarks are usually based on practical foundations. The only trouble with the old veteran is that professional grunt of his. He even uses it when asleep and after several evenings, or rather nights, spent in the same room with our British-American friend, we came to the conclusion that the stage has lost a great actor. When the gentle Mr. Butterfield dreams of chickens at 2 or 3 a. m. in the morning, his voice is very audible for several miles around; his war whoops would scare the Indians from their reservation. Mr. Butterfield is the only man living that can score birds while asleep. His neighbors score him the next morning, however. Sharp has one friend, though, that never goes back on him, viz., Mr. John Collins.

Another one of the veteran Canadian judges, Mr. L. G. Jarvis, of Montreal, enjoyed meeting the boys and renewing friendships made years ago. Jarvis is not a bit older looking than when we first met him some ten years ago. He is still in hopes of getting up a great show at Montreal next year.

Mr. George H. Burgott arrived a little late on Tuesday, but got through with his Leghorn classes at Guelph in good season the next morning. He will tell all about his classes in a special report. George tells us that we had a fine and dandy time in California and likes the boys on the Pacific Coast particularly. We are of the opinion the esteem is mutual.

Mr. Richard Oke, or rather "Dick Oke," was of course a familiar figure at the Ontario, and "Dick" has any number of friends in his own country, men who respect him as a man and fancier. He is looming up as a poultry judge of more than average ability, and bids fair to make one of the best all-round judges on this side of the Atlantic. He not only has the ability, but is as honest as the day is long.

There were some strenuous times in the White Wyandotte alley. Sharp Butterfield had just two hundred and seventy specimens to handle, an enormous class. The quality was very good, and exceptionally so in some individual specimens. Mr. "Jack" Martin captured the biggest share of the prizes and felt very happy over the result. He is a fine fancier and a perfect gentleman with whom it is a pleasure to talk and visit. There were plenty of other good fellows among the White Wyandotte men, our old friend Charles Massie being one of them.

We are glad to renew acquaintance with Mr. J. H. Warrington, the Black Spanish fancier of Cornwall, Canada. The first prize cock in the Black Spanish class, shown by Mr. Warrington, is the grandest bird of the breed we have seen in a great many years. The face alone was a marvel in length, pureness of color and evenness of surface.

The Hon. Allen Bogne was a visitor at the show for a day. The old veteran fancier and ex-president of the American Poultry Association was not in the best of health, but simply could not stay away from the "Ontario."

Mr. "Joe" Bennett, of Toronto, judged the one hundred and eighty-seven Barred Rocks on exhibition, and he had his hands full, but nothing disturbs Joe's mind when at work. He goes at it as if he enjoyed it and odesn't care a tinker's dam if the defeated exhibitors do or not.

We had a very enjoyable chat with Mr. I. K. Millard, one of Canada's greatest Barred Rock fanciers. If ever a breeder knew what color and barring of a Rock should be like, "Ike" Millard is the man. But as he remarked: "The trouble is to get it." Incidentally we learned that Mr. Millard, as well as several other Canadian fanciers, have had more or less unsatisfactory experience in buying breeding stock such as they desired from breeders and dealers on this side of the Canadian border. We are of the opinion that it will pay breeders in the United States to send exhibits of Barred Rocks to leading Canadian shows. There is a very good market there for real choice specimens.

Of the classes the writer of these notes handled at Guelph, it is a great pleasure to speak. The quality in all except one was of surpassing excellence. The exception was Black Sumatras. For some reason this fine breed has been allowed to fall by the wayside. Although there were several very good individual specimens, the majority were not of the correct type of Sumatras, not having pea-combs, nor showing the length of body and tail and greenish color so inseparable in a real fine Sumatra. Face and head points were also below the accepted Standard.

The Buff Wyandotte classes were exceedingly fine. First cock fine in shape, if not in best of feather, a rich even buff in color all over, clean wing and tail, good head and comb. The second was not far behind, being nice in shape and color, lacking only in tail, which showed a little black, and neck, which was light in undercolor. Third was another fine bird in shape and of good color, carrying a rather large comb and being somewhat too light in color of back and breast. Hens were fine. First, a blocky type of Wyandotte, rich in color all over; second, close up, but was not so good in color of tail; third, though a nice even-colored bird, was handicapped by comb being too large in shape of back. Cockerels were a grand bunch. First was a beautiful golden buff with fine head and comb, absolutely pure buff tail, primaries and secondaries large in size, neck feathers not

C. H. WELLES

THE happy thought of Christmas evidently brought our artist to his best in his presentation of light-hearted, always happy Charlie Welles, of Stratford, Connecticut, the champion in his class. Although he comes from the Nutmeg State, it has no influence over him in the trade. He always delivers the best for your money. May his shadow never grow less.

full grown and tail not fully out, otherwise good in shape, should develop into a grand cock bird; second was a perfect little beauty in shape, with good comb and head, very even color in surface, though a trifle off in tail color, had this bird the size and weight he would take a lot of beating. Third was fine in color with a little black in tail, but fails in shape, being too high in legs and long in head. First pullet was very even in surface, a fine shade of buff, pure buff tail and primaries, good head, comb and shape; second was another beauty in color, very even except main tail feathers, which showed a trifle smoky, fine in shape, good head and comb; third was even in color, but trifle too dark; fourth and fifth were both good ones, the latter especially so in color, but fails in size. It was a grand class.

There were eighty Black Minorcas and some of the finest we ever handled, and we doubt if a larger or better class was ever penned. First cock was a wonder in size and shape, and good in color, the comb large but well serrated; second was fine in color and excellent in comb, but not so large or good in shape as winner; third was fine in shape, of fair color, with good comb and lobes; first hen was grand in shape and size, fine color in comb and lobes; second was nearly close, having rather rough lobes; third loses in color and comb; fourth was fine in shape, good in comb and lobes, but failed in colors. Cockerels were a grand bunch of twenty-three. First being a beauty in style and shape, great in size, very good color, with splendid comb and lobes. Second was fine in color, with good comb and lobes, but not quite so good in shape or size; third was fine in shape, of very good color, comb and lobes too large; fourth had good lobes, head, comb and color, and was nicely shaped with exception of being too high on legs. The first, second and third pullets were like sisters, beautiful in type, fine in color, comb and lobes, with grand size. There were numbers of others in the lot that could win at the best of shows.

Columbian Wyandottes at Guelph were fairly good, the first pullet being the star of the class, a real top-notcher in color and shape. Partridge Wyandottes had small but good classes. First hen was a beauty in color, penciling and shape. We particularly fancied the first cockerel, fine stylish bird, with beautiful colored hackle and saddle. Black Wyandottes made but a small class, but were very good in quality. Javas were not numerous, but were good in Blacks and very fair in the mottled variety.

Silver Wyandottes were both numerous and good. First cock was large, good in shape, very silvery neck, well striped, excellent saddle, fine wing bar, open-laced breast; second was similar but not so even in breast lacing, or as good in wing bar; third was a stylish bird, with heavier lacing, good wings, but not so good in hackle. First hen had very even open lacing, good shape, head and comb, but failed in color of the hackle; second was fine in shape and well laced, except in breast; in the third the lacing was good except at throat, and penciled in tail coverts, good in shape. First cockerel had open laced breast and thighs, wing bar fine, good neck; fair back, head and comb good, fair shape; second was similar but darker in lacing and not so clean in wings; third smaller, but very promising, being of the open laced type and good shape. First pullet shows lacing of breast wing bow and back to be open, edge clear black, nice shape, good head, comb and neck fails only in lacing of breast near throat; second was strong in color of lacing of breast and wings, centers in back not being absolutely clear, shape except too long a back good; third was open laced, good in shape, but has some edging or frosting in breast.

Golden Wyandottes had fine classes. First cock was good in shape and style, but comb was rather large, beautiful hackle and saddle, color, good wings, lacking in upper breast lacing only; second had good shape and comb, well laced breast, good wing, not so good in neck and back; third had heavy coarse comb, good hackle, saddle and breast, too dark in wing bow, and loses in shape of breast and back. First hen was a grand old open laced bird, fine in color, good shape, and has but one fault—too large a comb; second was another good one in color, failing in breast lacing only; third good in shape and open laced, lacks in ground color and lacing of breast. First cockerel was good in shape and comb, hackle saddle was even in color, and good wings; second was not so good in comb and a trifle darker in color of back and wings, had good, open-laced breast and splendid wing bar; third, a smaller bird, carries tail too high, comb is uneven, but very fine in color of hackle and saddle. First pullet was a star, a real golden, open-laced, the black being even and of an intense greenish luster, beautiful hackle, good comb and shape; second was another fine one in open lacing, the back being especially fine and even, but not so good in hackle and comb as winner; third was a nice bird in color and shape, with showy and intense lacing, but not as even as in other two.

Indian Games had showy classes, the stars being: First cock, a grand fellow in size, immense in bone, well-spread thighs, good color and fine shape. First cockerel was another excellent specimen in type and color. Hens, especially first, were very fine in type and good in color. Pullets brought out good ones in first, second and third, but cockerels were not as strong as we expected, most of the birds being too leggy, although good in color. Any other variety brought out some very good Birchens and a few Malays. The balance of the report of the other judges, as well as the awards, will appear in our next issue.

Meat Meals

In the selecting of the meat meals the greatest care should be displayed. Never permit any one to sell you the refuse from the fertilizer tank. This is called tankage, and contains all kinds and manners of miserable mixtures, fit only for fertilizer. Pay the price for good, first-class dried beef scrap. Purchase only such as have the brand of quality on the outside that tells of the contents by analysis. Above all, do not feed any beef or meat preparations of any kind to your poultry that gives off an offensive smell when mixed with hot water. The best test you can have when buying is, first, the analysis on the outside of the sack furnished by a reputable firm, or favorable results obtained by the hot water test. A few tablespoonfuls of the material in a tin cup over which has been poured three or four ounces of boiling-hot water and stirred with a spoon will quickly tell the tale. If the smell is too offensive for you it will not be fit for the hens. Offensive food of any kind quickly taints the flavor of the eggs.

TURKEY FATTENING

Fattening of turkeys has had considerably more attention in England than in this country. Pen fattening, or yard fattening as it might be called, is much more generally followed there than here, and it is astonishing the additional amount of weight that will be added to the turkeys in this way. In the report of a recent experiment there, the following food was used: For the morning mash, one part linseed meal, containing twelve per ct. of oil; three parts corn meal, three parts barley meal, three parts ground oats; five parts boiled potatoes; five parts boiled turnips. All of these are moistened with hot milk and fed to them, all they will eat. For the evening meal give equal parts of cracked corn, barley and rolled oats, and milk to drink. The value of this manner of feeding is in the production of the finest quality of meat and the possibility of adding so much weight in so short a time. The most prized breed for this feeding is the cross-bred American Bronze and Black Norfolk, the hens from this cross making remarkable weight in three weeks. Some of the tom turkeys gain from four to four and a half pounds; the hens about a pound less.

There is another method of fattening turkeys for market, largely used on the other side. We copy from the report of an English expert the method that is followed for pellet feeding:

"A system of fattening turkeys which is widely practised by farmers' wives in this country is known as cramming with pellets. The turkeys are confined in a house or shed about three weeks before the time for killing, and for the first ten days they are fed in the natural way, all they will eat twice a day. This is followed by a period of ten days' cramming; but if the birds are thriving well cramming may be continued longer. The food, which usually consists of equal parts barley meal the ground oats, is mixed with milk in a thick paste. Some skill is required to cram turkeys by the 'pellet system.' The work is generally done by a woman, who dons a large apron and sits on a low box or stool, with a bucketful of mixed food and a large bowl of skimmed milk by her side. She kneads the food into pellets about the size and thickness of a finger, and keeps a pile of them on a piece of board ready for use. An attendant brings the turkeys, one at a time, from their house, and the woman who is cramming takes one at a time between her knees, opens its beak, takes a pellet, and, dipping it into the milk slips it down the bird's throat. Cramming in this way is rather tedious, but for those who keep only a small flock, and can spare the time, the system is an excellent one, as birds of great weight and excellent quality are turned out. A turkey hen will take from one-half to three-quarters of a pound at a meal, and a cock can do with a pound to a pound and a half of soft food. The birds are crammed twice a day—morning and evening."

The cramming machine is also coming into use for the finishing of turkeys for the English market. They are first fed in crates or coops. These coops are made of sufficient size and after the fashion of the crates or coops used for fattening chickens, being made large enough to hold from three to five male turkeys, and from four to six hen turkeys. They are trough-fed the same as the chickens for about two weeks. After that the stuffing machine is brought into use for the forcing of the turkeys to the finest condition. The food used for the cramming machine is finely-ground oats and barley, wet with skimmed milk and a small portion of tallow or other animal fat. The meals are mixed together in equal proportions, and the milk is stirred into them until a semi-liquid mash has been formed. Tallow is then added at the rate of three ounces per day for males, and two ounces for hens. The whole mash may be mixed in a tub or other vessel, and allowed to stand for twelve hours before use. Turkeys will eat an enormous quantity of this specially-prepared and palatable food, and the cost of fattening by this process described is considerable; but the flesh produced is the best quality that it is possible to get on a turkey, and the increase in weight when fattening has been skilfully carried on may be from five to six pounds in a male, and a pound or two less in a female. The expert states that, according to this it will be seen that if cramming with a semi-liquid food, using a machine, is skilfully done, it will be quite profitable, even though expensive.

It has become almost a necessity to crate, coop or machine-fatten all the poultry raised in the British Isles so as to bring them up to the highest excellence, to avoid coming in competition with what is imported in that from other countries. The greater part of all the turkey crop grown in England is marketed during Christmas week. There is not as much demand for them prior to that time as in this country. No difference how large a turkey may be, unless it is well-filled out and plump it does not make the most desirable table meat. Imagine one partially-fattened young Bronze turkey having added to the carcass from four to six pounds of good, solid meat in three weeks, turkeys being worth at this period from twenty-five to thirty cents a pound. If but four pounds were added to each, it would raise the total value per bird, even though the excellent quality did not bring a higher price. Our people should learn the advantages to be gained from the excellence of quality and the heavy weight possible to have through crate and machine feeding.

BROWN'S BUDGET

There is still too much fancy about pure-bred fowls. Records of egg-laying are not looked after with the degree of interest they should be. While it may be quite difficult to do so, yet selections can be made from prolific egg-laying hens, and the characteristic points that are pronounced be also maintained. Beauty and utility should be inseparable twins in all breeds of poultry. To trust to "egg type" in selection is too uncertain. The trap nest, it would seem, nearly solves the problem. Facts of great importance regarding the laying qualities of the hens can be ascertained quite easily in small flocks by the trap nests. With large flocks it is too troublesome.

An enchange says: "A successful Maine farmer manured one-half an acre of land with the droppings of twenty hens for one year, and produced an excellent crop of corn." Another says that "one bushel, well pulverized and mixed with a bushel of land plaster, will give more growth to root croops than a cart load of old barnyard manure." Hen manure is rich in ammonia and phosphates. It contains all the liquids as well as the solids.

Poultry and small fruits is a good combination for a man that is not afraid of work. The poultry enrich the land and destroy insects detrimental to the fruit crops. Turn the poultry on the fruit plats after the crop is gathered. Some fruit crops are grown that the poultry can remain with until the crop commences to ripen. Coops with broods can be set around among all bush or cane berries, and the young chicks will do no harm, but will find a liberal supply of insect food and just the kind of shade they require.

The awards at Hagerstown proves that the South is breeding good high-class poultry. Without doubt the poultry shows now held in the South have about as many high-class birds raised by local breeders as any of the shows in the North. With the new era of agriculture in the South, which includes a great diversity of crops which takes in grasses and the legumes, the South, considering climate, has some advantages in poultry-raising over other sections of the country.

The renewed interest shown in the South this winter with her poultry shows proves that the poultrymen are beginning to realize the favorable resources they have for poultry-raising.

Poultry-raising is the one industry that affords a pleasure to all classes. The lordly chanticleer crows as lustily for his cottage owner as he does for the milionaire. Environments are ignored. Fowls are found in all countries, and to every home, no matter how plain or grand, a flock of domestic poultry seems to give an additional attraction.

In England, reverend gentlemen are often found that are enthusiastic breeders, and some of them have won high honors with their poultry. A few "reverends" in his country are enthusiastic fanciers, but there is room for more. It is a recreation work especially suitable, and when one is once interested in it, the fascination is such as to make the work a most pleasant pastime.

Incubator season is now opening. Beginners with incubators should carefully observe the instructions of the maker. Don't imagine you "know better" than the maker. It is the little things which you may consider as quite unimportant that success depends upon. Don't "monkey" with the regulator above all things. It's one of the things about an incubator that is as sensitive to bungling or rough handling as it is to temperatures. It is best to have a stated time each day to look after the machine. Be sure the thermometer is correct and that it registers properly. Don't trust any red spirit thermometer.

When you get ready to use the brooder have it ready a little ahead of time. Heat it up ten or twelve hours before you use it, so as to be sure all moisture is driven out. Remember when you want the brooder at a certain temperature when the chicks are in it for the night, that you must make an allowonce for the body heat that will be generated when they are crowded into the brooder. If you want to keep them at, say ninety-eight degrees, get the temperature up to about eighty-five degrees, put the chicks in, and in fifteen minutes see what the temperature is. If above what you want turn lamp down a little; if not high enough, turn up the wick a little—very little—practise will soon enable you to know just what to do.

Try, the coming breeding season, to improve the quality of your flock. Select only a few of your very best hens or pullets to breed from. Don't let a "fairly" good one have a chance. Use only the best. You'll have less culls to eat your profit, and be better satisfied in many other ways when you sum up the results.

The so-called huckster is more of an addition to the fairs and poultry shows than he usually gets credit for. Often, if it were not for his entries, the number of varieties would be very small and make the display less conspicuous or interesting to the visiting public. Variety is the spice of life and one of the main attractions at a poultry show. Any one has a chance to breed the so-called rare or fancy breeds the huckster does, for he has no mortgage on any of the breeds.

Avoid crowding. This is one of the worst features of poultry growing. Do not overcrowd them in the daytime. Never overcrowd your poultry when they are on the roost. Give them sufficient room, remembering that each fowl should have not less than four to six square feet of floor space, according to size, and from seven and a half to twelve inches on the roost to conform to the width of body in proportion to the Leghorn, the Cochin or the Brahma.

Judging Barred Rocks

I read with a great deal of interest your remarks on the Barred Rock females at the Central Palace Show just held. It brings to my mind more than I would care to say about the judging of Barred Rocks for the past few years at New York. Why there should be so much difference of opinion as to the color of Barred Rocks I fail to see. It is supposed that our judges are to be teachers for the novice. But unless there is more consistency shown in placing the awards at New York during the next five years than has been shown in the past five, I believe the old breeders will think they have been taught something as well as the novice.

In judging, don't forget that word "consistent." Possibly there are times when a judge can not follow the exact shade of color in making his decisions. But there are very few cases when it is necessary to go from one extreme to the other. What the breeders of this country want are judges that know Barred Rock color and will place the awards on that color, whether it is the shade they prefer or not. I don't believe the fanciers would object to the open-barred type of bird winning the prizes, if they will win at all times. It is not a question of what are the proper shades of color, but which is the correct one.

The Standard reads that the colors should be modified black and white, the bars narrow, regular and running parallel across the feathers. That does not mean open, wide barring. There are one of two things that will have to be done: either change the Standard to read wide open barring; or award the prizes to the narrow parallel barred birds. It is my private opinion that many a breeder who loves Barred Rocks has given up the breeding of them simply because there has been so much inconsistency shown in awarding the prizes at our leading shows the past few years. There is no question in my mind but that it hurts the breed. The breeder goes through the aisles, looks over the winners, then asks himself, after having seen several different shades among the winners, "Well, I declare! What is Barred Rock color?"

Your remarks about an unplaced pullet in your write-up of the Great Eastern Show were very timely. You say, according to the Standard, this bird should be classed as a model in color and barring. If it is not according to the Standard that our birds are judged, all that fuss the revision committee held at Buffalo doesn't amount to much. That is just the thing that hurts the greater popularity of Barred Rocks. They are judged according to Mr. So-and-so's opinion. But that is not what the breeder wants. He wants the Standard opinion, and he wants it in a consistent manner, which it is bound to be, if followed.

We don't hear near as much talk about the judging of Wyandottes or Leghorns. Why? Because the judges have followed the Standard instead of making the Standard follow them.—Harry M. Lamon.

Cleanliness among Poultry

Cleaning the hen house is a matter much talked and written about, but it is doubtful whether more advice is given on the subject than need be, for it is one of the most important things in the whole game. To be continually cleaning and sweeping the hen house is unnecessary; at the same time there is no danger of having it too clean. It is a piece of work that the poultryman is always well paid for doing. With a great many this warning to "clean up" remains unheeded. I find that more attention is given to this matter by village poultry keepers than by those on the farm. This accounts for the villager making a larger per ct. of profit from his hens than the farmer, which is the case in most every instance. The man in the village, or the one who has a city lot, does things more systematically, while the farmer does them when he gets to it. Seldom do I find through the country a poultry house that is cleaned out oftener than once a month, and a great many of them are not cleaned from fall until spring.

A dropping board properly arranged under the perches saves a good deal of filth from getting into the straw and on the floor. If this is cleaned off once a week, it will keep the house in pretty good shape. Then clean out the litter and replace with fresh straw or other material as often as it gets broken fine, or becomes damp and filthy. When the litter is allowed to remain on the floor for a long time and the grain is thrown into it, the hens that eat the grain can not help but pick up more or less filth, which surely does them harm. It also pays to look carefully to the water supply. See that they have clean, fresh water so placed that they will not get into it or spill it over the floor, causing dampness; for, generally, the hen-house is damp enough at the best.

Cleanliness saves feed and a good deal of it, too. It is one of the necessary attributes to success, and the time spent in cleaning out, no matter if you have only mongrels, is never wasted.—V. M. Couch.

SHOWS AND SHOW AWARDS

Springfield, Mass., Show

Springfield poultry fanciers again did themselves proud at the last show, December 3 to 9, 1905.

The show was cooped by the Empire Cooping Co. in their usual tasty and up-to-date manner in a well-lighted, roomy hall, which was the mecca for poultrymen from all parts of New England. The quality of the birds shown was of the highest and the management worked like beavers to make it a success. The throngs which filled the aisles every day of the show testified to that same success which the promoters deserved.

Barred Rocks was a hot class with quality as good as seen at New York or Boston, the best ones being in the male winners. Buff Rocks were a splendid lot. The first cockerel, while quite young and immature, was easily the leader of the whole class, and was sold at a long price immediately the ribbons were placed.

M. F. Delano placed the ribbon on Barred and Buff Rocks in his usual conscientious manner.

White Rocks were a heavy class both in numbers and quality, the males leading in all the requisites that the Standard requires.

Light Brahmas brought out some of the leading breeders of New England, and Uncle Isaac reveled in the judging of his favorites.

White Wyandottes while not as large a class as a year ago held many birds of high class. Buff Wyandottes were few in number and not up in quality. The New Wyandottes, the Columbians, were out in full force, and received more than their share of attention, the first pen being of a high quality, especially in Wyandotte shape and head points. Silver-penciled, Silver-laced Partridge and Goldens were few in numbers but good ones throughout.

Single-combed Rhode Island Reds made up the largest class of the show, seventy-one singles and sixteen pens being shown. A Fall River exhibitor won five firsts, one second and a third with birds very even of the right red shade in every section. Rose-combed Rhode Island Reds were a hot class, but not up in general quality to the Single-combs.

In Single-combed Brown Leghorns, the class was a wonder, equaled only by the famous Hagerstown meet. In fact, every variety of Leghorns was splendidly represented in goodly numbers. The Houdan class was of such merit as to recall the unexcelled exhibits of Uncle Paul Pinckney. Typical shape was combined with the color, white, free from smoke, black lustrous with that most desirable greenish sheen.

The Single-combed Black Minorca class was noticeable for the first and second cockerels. These were grand individuals that towered way above the rest of the classes in shape, color and type. Rose-combed Blacks had a small class, a noticeably fine cockerel winning first on grand color, free from purple barring and a bird of splendid shape.

Blue Andalusians were few in numbers but of great merit. Bantams were of small classes. Silkies brought out over thirty birds of fine quality. Game Bantame few but fit to win anywhere.

Big Transfer of Silver-penciled Wyandotte Stock

This is to certify that we have sold to E. A. Weimer, proprietor of Exmoor Poultry Farms, Lebanon, Pa., our entire stock of Silver-penciled Wyandottes, including all our Madison Square Garden and Hagerstown winners. We would heartily recommend Mr. Weimer to all our old customers and new ones as well.

Spangler Bros.

Mr. J. H. Spangler has accepted the position of assistant superintendent of the Exmoor Farms.

Certificate of Sale

This is to certify that I have sold and this day shipped to Edw. Oyster, of Strawberry Ridge, Pa., the first prize Silver-penciled Wyandotte cockerel at Madison Square Garden, New York, 1905, and with him four of our best hens. This bird won first in competition with the best breeders in this variety in America, and Mr. Oyster should get some grand chicks from this yard.

(Signed) Aug. D. Arnold.

Newark Show

The association known as the Fanciers' Poultry Association of New Jersey will hold their regular winter show during the week of January 29 to February 3. The Newark Show is one of the most successful winter shows of the East, and deserves the worthy consideration of all fanciers and exhibitors. An application to T. Farrer Rackham, secretary, 456 Market Street, Newark, N. J., will bring a premium list and full particulars as to their coming show.

News Items

We have the following from Secretary Crawford as the entries of the coming New York Show: Single entries in poultry, 3,342; breeding pens of poultry, 267; entries of pigeons, 1,827; other entries, 112; total, 5,548. This does not include cats and cage birds.

By the way, it is well to state at this time that Mr. Geo. O. Brown, of Parkville, Md., is to be one of the judges at New York. His name seems to have been printed in the list of stockholders instead of the list of judges.

Frankfort, N. Y., is to have a poultry show during the week of February 13. Mr. E. M. Budlong, of that city, is secretary.

The following class has been provided for the Boston Show: Rose-combed Black Bantams; Class 525A, cock; Class 525B, hen; Class 525C, cockerel; Class 525D, pullet.

The New York State Cup offered by the American Black Minorca Club will be competed for at the Madison Square Garden show, held in January. The cup is for New York State members only.

The American Light Brahma Club will give club ribbons at Boston and Hartford for special best cock, hen, cockerel, pullet and pen, also for special best shaped male and female. At Danville, Ill., the club will give ribbons for best cock, hen, cockerel, pullet and pen.

Martin's White Wyandottes won more prizes than any other exhibitor. First and Third Cockerel, First and Third Pullet, Second Cock, Second Hen and Second Pen. This was a remarkable win, owing to the fact that previous to this show they had been cooped nearly two weeks at the Toronto Show, and thus were not in as good condition as the birds they competed with.

Editorial Gossip

The January issue of The Feather contained much of interest to poultrymen of all classes. New breeds of both land and water fowls; how to build a first-class poultry house, and other matters of vital importance were fully set forth in this issue. Every one interested in the most up-to-date features of poultry culture should add The Feather and The American Fancier at once to the list of publications received by them. By so doing you start 1906 on the road to prosperity,

The next issue of The American Fancier will contain the report of the New York Show. No other publication in the country pays equal attention to the complete show reports as do The Feather and The American Fancier. The American Fancier is truly the fancier's weekly poultry paper. The Feather, issued monthly, is a most complete, up-to-date presentation of how to handle poultry for profit in all its branches. Every one throughout the country interested in high-class, standard-bred fowls and market poultry and eggs, should have these journals.

As we go to press Madison Square Garden is crowded to its utmost with the finest specimens of poultry, pigeons and pet stock possible to gather from the yards and lofts of the best fanciers throughout the country. The display of incubators, brooders, poultry feeds and appliances of all kinds exceeds any like display. Caged birds and pet stock are attractive features of the show. Secretary Crawford and his able assistants are as busy as bees. The distribution of prizes in the largest classes has been satisfactorily accomplished; the fortunate ones being most happy. Those less fortunate are trimming their sails and making preparations in hope for better success another year.

There is a movement on foot known as "The Drawn Poultry Agitation" which, if successful, will prove most injurious to the poultry-growing interest of the world. The agitators of this movement claim that all poultry dressed for market should have head and feet detached and entrails drawn within twenty-four hours of killing. Every one who knows anything whatever of the handling of dressed poultry for market knows that this would result in a destructive loss to all who sell poultry for market who dwell a day's journey from the place of sale.

Poultry that has its head severed from the body and that is opened and cleansed of its entrails would not keep in transit more than three or four days. At the expiration of that period, it would mould, sour, the giblets decay, and untold loss would come to all shippers forty-eight hours from the place of sale. The present method of killing poultry is a well considered art. The sticking in the roof of the mouth is done to prevent the possibility of air working its way into the carcass after death. A new method has been used to considerable extent; that is severing the head with a quick jerk from the neck, and extending same so as to permit the blood to settle and congeal about the head and in the opening of the neck. This completely seals the passageway to the body of the fowl, so as to further prevent the possibility of air working in and destroying the carcass after death.

Poultry that is not fed twenty-four hours prior to killing stuck in the roof of the mouth, hung up by the shanks to bleed; that is dry-picked; properly cooled so as to remove all the animal heat from the body will keep in good condition for several years in a cold storage house. Poultry that has been drawn would not keep any length of time in good condition, under the most favorable care and storage. We do not believe that there could be any movement set on foot that would bring greater injury to the poultry interest of the world than would the passage and enforcement of such a law.

We call the attention of every poultryman in America—in fact in the world, to the lurking danger behind such a movement, and there should be a general uprising of all poultrymen in the world in opposition to the proposed movement.

Evidently those in favor of same do not possess all the knowledge that they should about growing, killing, handling and marketing the poultry products of the world.

We understand that Poultry Husbandry is the name selected for the new poultry publication to be issued from Waterville, N. Y. We are informed that thousands of names were suggested and while congratulating these people on their new venture, we may be permitted to suggest that Poultry Culture, even according to Webster, might have fitted the case better than the name selected. For a New Year offering we will send The Feather, The American Fancier and Poultry Husbandry all for one dollar.

Mr. Baerman takes exception to the criticism of the proposed amendments as set forth in recent issues of this paper. His reply we could not publish in full, as we would not care to present them as written. We wish, however, to commend the gentleman for the most reasonable stand that he takes with refernce to the admission of the Rose-combed Rhode Island Red or American Red by name, at the next meeting. We quote his own words. "In order that the association may have this matter off the calendar, I give attention to the work vitally affecting its future, that I shall not personally strive for an endorsement of the action changing the name of the so called Rose-combed Rhode Island Reds to American Reds. If others desire to take action they may do so, but if the association at this meeting should express the feeling that it would be good for the association for me to do so, I will withdraw my motion now pending (if we mean to give force to the action at Pittsburg); however, I shall demand some assurance of proper respect for the wishes of those who have done most for the Rose-combed Reds."

This looks as though Mr. Baerman had reached a very reasonable solution of the proposition, for as we have always claimed, there should be but one description for Rhode Island Reds, and all varieties of same should come under the same description and name with the variety prefix.

We always felt that Mr. Baerman was the one individual injured, if any one was injured by the outcome of the controversy; but we believe that he will agree with us that it would be better for a single individual to be injured rather than to have numerous names and descriptions in the Standard, all of which pertain to the one breed. We congratulate Mr. Baerman on his conclusion in this matter, and we trust that he will be most successful in the handling of his Reds.

We have a communication from Mr. J. S. Garrett, Glenns Falls, N. Y., with reference to swiss chard, with which he claims to have been most successful. He states that he never had an ounce of the seed to sell, and that he has scarcely enough seed for his own use next spring; that he has been most successful with it in a small town lot, and that he should like to have others try it. We shall be very glad indeed to publish an article from Mr. Garrett, telling just what the swiss chard is, how it is planted, cultivated and fed, but we do not care to publish in the columns of our paper a free advertisement for those who might have seed to sell. Mr. Garrett, please tell the readers of this paper all about the plant and how it is grown, leaving out any reference to the sale of the seed by any one, and greatly oblige our many readers.

There is no better food for poultry than good, sound, wholesome barley. Barley whole and barley ground into meal is largely used in other countries for poultry food. In any locality where barley is grown it can be made use of profitably when fed to poultry. One of the favorite mash foods of foreign countries is a mixture of finely-ground barley, oats and corn. These are ground much finer than are usually sold in this country, and are mixed into the mash, one-fourth of the whole being boiled white potatoes, the balance made of equal proportion of the three meals above mentioned.

The agricultural departments of the world are urging upon the people in every locality the advantages of growing more ducks and geese for the markets. These two kinds of poultry have reached a large increased demand in the markets of the world. What used to be considered a luxury in the way of a nice, plump duck or goose has become almost a necessity in many families. New varieties of egg-producing ducks, and better roasting and market ducks of all kinds have been produced. Formerly ducks were only considered as a novelty, now duck eggs are one of the products of the market. Bakers prefer them; they bring a higher price than do chicken eggs, and now that they have some varieties that produce almost as many eggs in a year as do the hens there are many advantages and many reasons why there should be an increased production of water-fowl throughout the country.

"Early hatched goslings can be plucked four times, if properly fed, and be ready to sell at Christmas, or they may be plucked three times and sold at Thanksgiving time." So states Mr. Beale, of Ohio. In plucking the feathers from the young geese be very careful not to pull too many at a time. If the skin is broken apply a little sulphur. The plucking should begin the first time before they are feathered fully on the back. As soon as the points of the feathers are dry they may be plucked. As soon as they begin to shed any of their feathers pluck them at once.

As we go to press the famous Madison Square Garden Show of New York is in full swing, as great and big as ever. A complete report with official awards will appear in The American Fancier next week.

The importance of the New York Show is recognized by all poultry, pigeon and pet-stock fanciers. There is only one New York on the American continent and it is the metropolis of the New World. The prestige is considerable, so that a blue ribbon means much to the successful exhibitor, in fact, even a ribbon of any kind is worth having when won in the strenuous competition existing in many of the popular classes at New York.

We learn that the Johnstown triumvirate, B. W. Mosher, Frank Sutliff and Elmer Plantz, were engaged several weeks ago by Secretary H. V. Crawford, to help him handle the big entries at the Garden.

The Hon. Joseph Shull, of Johnstown, N. Y., has left Farm-Poultry and handled Deacon Purvis's new monthly, Poultry, at the Garden.

The Mohawk Valley Poultry Association will hold its show February 13 to 16 instead of February 6 to 9, as first announced. The Empire Cooping Company will do the caging and feeding. J. H. Drevenstedt will judge the show. Arthur G. Bouck, Frankfort, N. Y., is the president of the club and informs us that prospects for a high-class show are very bright. Frankfort, N. Y., is well located for a poultry show, and will command a large local patronage.

Reports from Scranton, Pa., indicate that it will have one of the finest shows ever held in the Keystone State. As entries are limited to one thousand single birds and the desire of many of the best fanciers in the East to exhibit there is so great, it will be a case of hustle to get in on the ground floor in very good season. The show will be held January 15 to 19. Ralph H. Weeks is the secretary.

Our old and erudite friend, Isaac K. Felch, is still loyal to the score-card and can not see where comparison judging has made any headway. If "Uncle Isaac" will look over the shows held in New York State alone he will find the score-card conspicuous by its absence. The same applies to New Jersey and partly so to Connecticut. As far as we can learn Pennsylvania is not overrun with score-card shows.

Politics are beginning to be lively in A. P. A. circles. Editor Purvis, in the December issue of his Poultry, writes: "It is probable there will be two tickets for president and secretary-treasurer offered at the Cincinnati meeting of the American Poultry Association. One will carry the names of Eugene Sites, of Ohio, for president, and T. E. Orr for secretary-treasurer. The other will carry the names of H. V. Crawford, of New Jersey, for president, and Fred L. Kimmey, of Illinois, for secretary-treasurer. Prepare your ballots, gentlemen." There are several more candidates in the field, from what we can learn after traveling over considerable territory. No doubt a few slates will be smashed, but it is safe betting that the "Ohio idea" will come very near winning out. The two Buckeyes—Sites and Orr—are the favorites in the betting ring just now.

Personally we have no particular choice for the presidency and secretaryships of the American Poultry Association; all we can hope for is a capable man for each office. There are some men that have grown gray in the poultry business who, if they would accept, would make ideal candidates for the respective offices. The inducements and rewards are not such as to attract men of this caliber. Their time is too valuable looking after business interests of considerable importance, and while the pecuniary part may play no role in a matter of this kind, such men like to feel assured of real sympathetic support of the work they naturally expect to perform in trying to advance the interests and standing of the American Poultry Association. With the roving disposition of the old society and the swelled noddles of some of the big and little fry it will be hard lines to get the cool, conservative element to enter into the business of reorganization. The territory of the United States is seemingly too large for the A. P. A. to cover—as it is conducted at present. It is true there is a wide and fertile field for the A. P. A. to cultivate, but the fellows that are willing to do it usually drop out of the business before they get a chance to do the work.

It's about time the A. P. A. appointed a committee on judges and issued licenses to competent men. When men score Birchen Game Bantam hens as Silver Duckwings and judge Crevecœurs as La Fleche at important shows, it's about time to make a big house-cleaning.

The editor of The Reliable Poultry Journal, Grant M. Curtis, makes a very pertinent and powerful plea for specialty clubs and gives some facts regarding the work done by such men as Denny, Schwab and Little.

The work done by the latter three secretaries of specialty clubs is acknowledged to be effective and far-reaching. All three have worked hard to boom their favorites and the latter were popular varieties. Mr. Hallock, secretary of the National White Wyandotte Club, has done much to boom the famous Whites and succeeded in building up one of the most powerful specialty clubs on this continent. We believe Mr. Burgott did good work as secretary of the American Leghorn Club and we could call attention to secretaries of other specialty clubs who worked hard and faithfully to make both club and breed a success. But all breeds are not alike when it comes to a "boom." The good old standbys are lost in the shuffle. The Rhode Island Reds are riding on a huge wave of popularity, and the breeders of them are enjoying the prosperity their efforts, aided and abetted by specialty clubs, are entitled to. The lordly Langshan and magnificent Light Brahma are not "in the running," to use a current phrase. Yet both are as good fowls as the world ever saw.

The editor of The Reliable Poultry Journal truly remarks: "A crying need in poultrydom to-day is for more and better specialty clubs. Take the Langshans in America, for example; also the Light Brahmas. What will become of the truly lordly Langshan and magnificent Light Brahma if the breeders of them do not find strength in unity; if they do not soon organize, cooperate and promulgate? The answer is being written down in hard facts while you are reading these lines. The popularity of the Langshans has decreased quite materially during the last three or four years and the grand old Brahmas have suffered during the same period to a still greater extent."

These are cold facts and need the earnest consideration of all good fanciers. We believe it is but square justice to call attention to the fact that Mr. John Rumbold, secretary of the American Light Brahma Club, has given his time and ability to keep the grand old Brahma in the front rank. The New England Light Brahma Club has done yeomen service in keeping this breed before the public. It was no fault of either club that Light Brahmas did not keep up with the procession.

The real trouble is that the public want something new or something that is advertised as superior to anything else. How many men to-day could be convinced that a Black Langshan carcass is better than a yellow-skinned Rhode Island Red, Wyandotte or Rock? And yet there were shrewd buyers of poultry in New York City fifteen years ago that paid extra prices for the black-legged, white-skinned Langshans. To-day a Langshan in the market is a rara avis.

The fact is the Langshans and Light Brahmas have been side-tracked. Both breeds will lay as well and often better in winter than some of the over-boomed popular varieties of to-day. Their chief faults are feathered legs, i. e., the chief fault in the eye of the butcher. When Light Brahmas and Langshans can produce from one hundred and fifty to one hundred and seventy eggs per capita in a year, of really good, rich eggs, it's about time to examine into the producing capacity of other more favored varieties, bearing in mind that yield and quality are to go hand in hand.

We believe in specialty clubs when the object is to advance the merits of the breed fostered. We disbelieve in clubs of a similar character where the object is to advance the interests of the officers only. That the latter abuse has existed and does exist is not a mooted question. In some instances it is a positive fact. That is why some decent fanciers decline to be members of certain specialty clubs. We regret to say this for we believe reformation is better made from within than from without.

The New York Show

Monday being a holiday, but little progress was made in arranging the Garden that day. Judging began about noon on Tuesday and finished Wednesday evening. The great classes—Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Leghorns, Brahmas and Cochins all told number 138; Open Class Barred Plymouth Rocks, 230. The great men are here— Hawkins, Thompson, Bright, Bradley Brothers, Gardner, and Latham. Prizes distributed. White and Buff Plymouth Rocks very strong, heavy classes. All the Wyandotte classes well balanced, with white variety in the lead. A large number of Partridge and Columbian Wyandottes shown—Single Comb White Leghorns and Orpingtons come next. Following these are the Brown Leghorn classes. In all 3,342 entries in Open Class poultry. There are 268 pens, 2,000 pigeons, 232 cats, 171 cage birds, 110 displays.

Madison Square Garden is beautifully decorated, following last week's Games and Country Fair. Up to Wednesday night the weather was bad, and attendance not so good as it should be. Better weather is promised and larger attendance is expected.

The display of incubators, brooders, foods and poultry appliances is the largest in the history of Madison Square Garden. A large number of new names and faces are among the exhibitors. The new young blood is strongly in evidence among the winners.

HARRISON WEIR DEAD

Was Noted as Artist, Author, and Journalist

LONDON, January 4.—Harrison W. Weir, artist, author and journalist, died today at the age of eighty-two. He was on the original staff of the Illustrated London News and the last survivor of it. He was also connected with the London Field, Graphic, Black and White, Poultry and other periodicals. He was a voluminous writer of works on animals, particularly of poultry and other birds, furnishing his own illustrations of them.

"Our Poultry and All About Them" occupied him twenty years. It is a book of over 600,000 words and contains over thirty-seven richly colored pictures and over 350 black and white drawings. For over thirty years Mr. Weir was judge at all the principal poultry and pigeon shows and was designer of race cups for Goodwood, Ascot, etc., for Garrard & Co. He was the originator of the cat show that is now held annually at the Crystal Palace.

BROWN'S BUDGET

Resolved, That I will commence the New Year with a flock culled so that I have quality of the best to breed from.

That the flocks shall all receive more intelligent care than I have ever before given my poultry.

That I will be more particular with the rations, aiming to feed for some definite purpose.

That I will be more observing and by close daily inspection will endeavor to check incipient troubles.

That I will keep a record of all mishaps and the disappointments that result from any of my methods, so I may avoid them in the future.

That I will do all I can to help our local shows with entries and to encourage them in all other possible ways.

That I will keep an "ad" running in my favorite poultry paper, and aid all I can in securing some new subscribers, as every new subscriber makes a customer for some one.

That I will ship all poultry cooped in clean light-weight coops, well littered and with suitable conveniences for feeding and watering in transit.

That I will include scratching sheds or houses among the dependable things for winter egg production, and the maintenance of the health of my flocks.

That I will do all I can for the specialty clubs I belong to and will commence at once by sending my dues to the treasurer. Nothing equals a good specialty club to call attention to a breed.

That I won't make off-hand criticisms of a judge's work in a show room, but that hereafter when I indulge in such criticisms it will be after I have handled the winners to make comparisons the same as the judge did.

That no one shall ever have a chance to remark from the condition of my poultry houses that I am anything but a firm believer in clean houses, not once a week clean, but every day.

That I will not hatch out more chickens than I have space to properly care for. Experience has taught me that this is unwise. It is easier to hatch than raise chickens. Can't crowd the incubator like we can the coops and runs.

That it is well to experiment with both pullets' and hens' eggs in the incubator. It is a good thing to know when various troubles ensue in hatching, whether it is the hens' or pullets' eggs that are causing them. Some authorities claim that the first few eggs laid by pullets are decidedly unreliable for fertility. It's worth investigating.

That all breeds of poultry should be valued more for their egg record than beauty points. That there is no reason why utility and beauty should not be an inseparable combination with all breeds.

That I will not sell to stores incubator chicks to be used in show display windows, and then sold to children and to eventually die lingering, suffering deaths; that this is a feature of business I must "cut out" if I am to deserve success.

That I will pay stricter attention to giving the hens drinking water in winter—not the snow and ice slush, but water that has the chill taken off on cold days. Hens are liberal drinkers even in winter. When they are given water that does not chill them it adds to the egg supply—in fact, is as important as any of the food they are furnished with.

That I will stop guess work and for 1906 keep an account with my hens and thereby know which side of the fence I am on. Cackleation with the hens and myself, as it were.

That it is a good thing to exchange ideas, and from now on if I learn any new wrinkles in the poultry business I will send it to the poultry paper, and thereby help pay for the ideas I have been benefited by, that others have made public.

That I will put less theory and more practical effort in my poultry keeping. Sitting by a cheerful fireside and doing poultry keeping on paper may be a pleasant occupation, or anticipation, and if figures don't lie you can lie with figures. The real thing, experience, is what will measure a man's ability or capacity, not pencil and paper.

That the coming season I will have decent vermin-proof coops for my broods—no more leaky make-shifts for me—nothing shall be too good for my chicks.

With reference to the insect pest on water-fowl, a zoological expert tells us that where they are kept in small lots or pens and deprived of the free use of water to bathe in, water-fowl will become so badly infested with insect vermin and their houses so full that it is very difficult indeed to be rid of them. He cited one instance where he had to burn the houses and plow up the yard, dust the geese and ducks with insect powder a number of times, put them in boxes with all confined in an air-tight enclosure excepting the head and breathing apparatus, and thoroughly fumigate with chlorine and ammonia. This changed our opinion formerly held that water-fowl were not subject to the insect vermin.

Grain Foods

We noticed a short time ago in one of our exchanges a very pertinent expression. It was "a gill of millet seed is better than a quart. The small seed induces the hen to scratch for them."

This statement is very true. We witnessed the dire disaster of the utter destruction of many hundreds of young chicks in a brooder house through the feeding of too much millet seed. Millet seed should be fed as extra or dessert, just a little now and then to coax the hens along and to induce them to scratch in the litter for it. Just a few seeds in the grain mixture for the little chicks—not much—just about a tablespoonful to a quart of mixture. This will be of benefit where too much will destroy their lives. It is too oily; too rich. Its tendency is to swell up and clog the bowels. This is why it proves so destructive to both old and young fowls when fed too liberally.

Kafir corn is recommended for young chicks. So is pearl barley. Both are good. Neither of these, however, should be fed whole; they should always be cracked into two or more pieces before they are fed to any extent, either to young chicks, hens or pigeons. Kafir corn that is thoroughly well dried is almost as hard as a bullet and just as easy of reduction in the crop of the poultry. For these reasons it should be cracked or broken open before being fed. A little of this, like the millet, may be fed to grown poultry or pigeons but not young squabs or chicks.

We often recommend hulled oats for poultry of all kinds. This is to avoid the feeding of the husks or hulls of the oats. Where you can not obtain the hulled oats get them clipped. This is oats passed through machinery, and the greater part of the hull trimmed therefrom. This reduces the consumption of the husks. It is in its natural state more than one-half husk. When fed to poultry in its natural state they must grind up and consume one pint of straw to every quart of oats that is fed to them. The straw, or husk, or hull of the oats has no food value whatever. For this reason it is a waste of time and labor in the life of the hen to compel her to grind up the hull of the oats, which retards rather than increases the egg production. Then, again, the point of the oat hull is very sharp and when fed to any extent it is possible that they will lacerate the interior of the crop of the fowl, creating an irritation that may lead to disease. Some of the best authorities in the veterinary world claim that much of the poultry that dies without apparent cause may be attributed to the irritation of the internal parts of the crop and the passage to the gizard with the sharp points of oats and other sharp-pointed grain. Whether this be true or not can be substantiated by those who feed any quantity of oats to their poultry. The greater part of the oats that is fed to poultry at the present time is ground into meal and mixed into the mash food.

Those who depend upon chicken hens to raise their goslings usually provide enclosures made of twelve-foot boards. The goslings are confined in here and the mother hen is allowed to range at large. She will not go far from them. If an old store box is turned down in the enclosure she will go in there with the goslings so long as they need brooding. The enclosure can be moved around every day for fresh grass supply.

SHOWS AND SHOW AWARDS

Canada's Greatest Show

The great Ontario Show, held at Guelph, Canada, December 12 to 15, was commented upon in the December 23 issue of The American Fancier. Below will be found the special reports of Judges Burgott and Bennett as well as the official list of awards. The actual number of single entries at this great exhibition was very close to thirty-five hundred.

Mr. Geo. H. Burgott, judge of Leghorns, writes:

"This is certainly a great and wonderful educator, and I believe that the average agriculturist of that great province and also adjoining ones realize what that noble government is doing for them. It is impossible for me to take the time to describe the whole fair although I would heartily like to. Again I say a gigantic educator. I will undertake in a brief way to give a description of the classes I had the honor of passing upon.

"I first particularly wish to say how the entire exhibit of poultry was handled, and when I tell you that the worthy gentlemen, A. P. Westervelt, secretary, and his assistant, that genial gentleman, Dr. A. W. Bell, both of Toronto, handled the poultry, to those who are personally acquainted with them it would be useless to say more. However, I wish to say the management was of the highest order, not an error and every bird in its place. No questions were necessary and if there should have been any that genial gentleman, John Saunders, was always ready to answer and knew every exhibit of that great entry of over three thousand four hundred birds. Why do not more of our boys on this side take in this show? Because they have never visited it. If they would they would be on hand annually.

"Still, a word for the exhibitors in my classes, who were gentlemen in every respect. Never before have I judged classes of this quality and magnitude without the least interference of a single exhibitor, whom, as you may imagine, when they were showing under such competition, were exceedingly anxious to know their fate. Not a word, not a whisper, until I had finished my classes, when I was more than pleased to answer each and all of their courteous questions. I assure you it was a pleasure.

"In the Single-combed White Leghorn class the first cock was an elegant bird, a very easy winner in his class, white, typical and a grand bird; second was also a very fine bird, good type but not as good in head. The balance of the class were all birds of merit, following closely the first and second. Among the hens we find a grand bird in the first, a trifle pinched in tail, grand head (for a hen) and fine in color. The second was also a very fine hen, not quite typical, and the balance were right up close to these birds; many other good ones, too, were shown. The cockerels were a grand lot; the first was a gem, really the only fault was the blade of his comb—a grand bird, white and with the very best of coop manners; second was also a fine bird, not quite as typical but no doubt needed more coop training. The third, fourth and fifth were all birds of high order. Pullets made up another grand class. First, a gem in her class, was in the best of condition and a true-typed bird, truly a grand specimen. The whole class was of the kind that the lover of the Leghorn is pleased to feast his eyes upon.

"In the Single-combed Brown Leghorn class the first cock was the only outstanding bird in fairly good condition, and a good-colored bird. The balance of the class was fairly good. In the cockerel class we find some wonders; first, second and third have that strong family resemblance (no doubt brothers); the first, a grand-typed bird with the very best of color, as were the second and third. Fourth and fifth are also fine birds and show their breeding. First and second hens are two exceptionally fine birds; the first only wins over the second on account of condition. A week or so later these awards would be reversed. The balance of the class was fairly good. In the pullet class were seen four good ones. The first, a grand-colored bird, is somewhat undeveloped, not letting her show what she is really worth; a bird of high order. The second, a fine bird, a trifle more shafty, is more fully developed. The third will win over the second a week or two hence, being undeveloped, but will be better in color. The fourth is also a fine bird, but with a trifle more shafting than first and third.

"The Single-combed Black Leghorn class was the finest class I have ever had the pleasure of handling for the size; truly a wonder in cocks and cockerels, grand in type and were all winners. When I say grand type in Black Leghorns that means something, for you who breed Blacks know that type has been a hard fight. The females were also of a very high order, in fact the winners were all representative birds.

"While the Rose-combed White and Brown Leghorn classes were small as compared to the Single-combed they were made up of some very fine birds though not quite equal in type to the Single-combed varieties. The Whites were a little the strongest, some very fine cocks and cockerels being shown in the winners."

Plymouth Rocks at Guelph Canada

(Special Report by J. E. Bennett, Judge.)

I will take them as I judged them, White Rocks first, and a grand class they were, about one hundred and thirty birds. The first cock was a grand bird in every particular, right through molt, with full tail, grand shape, good comb and fine legs, wins easily. Second was another big, fine bird and as white as first, but ragged in tail and not quite so good in comb. Third, a very fine bird, was not as large as the others and looks narrow in breast and body compared with the other two, but was a winner all the same. Fourth and fifth were good, but not in it with the others. Some very fine birds were left out as there were no more cards for this class.

White Rock hens had a class of thirty or over, as there were ten prizes. It was difficult to find anything the matter with the first hen but her legs, and she was very pale in legs. There was a slight shade of yellow, but as she won everywhere else I had to give her the first or put her out, so gave her the benefit of the doubt. Second hen had grand shape and color but tail was not quite out yet. Third was another very fine hen and as white as snow, but not quite so large. Fourth, fifth and sixth were real good hens and fit to win almost anywhere. In fact right up to the tenth there was not a hen but that was good.

First cockerel was a very large bird of grand shape and very white, a little off in comb, but in splendid show condition. Second, another very fine bird, was not so large, but good in shape and color, ran first very close. Third, if a trifle older, would give them a very close run. They were three very hard birds to beat. All were as white as snow. Fourth was a very large bird, but off in comb. Fifth and sixth real good birds and not a shade of brass in any one of them. The others lost a little in color. There were ten or twelve good birds taken in the class. I think it was the best ever put up.

The White Rock pullets were the hottest class of the lot of White Rocks. First pullet was a regular beauty, as white as a lily with perfect comb, grand shape and fine condition, wins well, and I think the best White Rock in the show. Second, another very fine pullet, but seems a little droopy. Third and fourth hard to pick from; just as good in color, but not quite so good in shape. Then there were ten or twelve real good pullets and not one but was fit to show anywhere. As I said before this was the best class in the White Rocks.

Buff Rocks had not as large a class as last year, five cocks only were entered. First was a very fair bird, nice buff in color, fair shape, but too much comb and wattles. Second lost in color to first and was not so good in shape. Third was not a very good specimen. Only three buff hens were entered. First, a very fair hen, was an easy winner. The others might be a lot better. This class Ithought very poor and would like to see a lot better next year. Eight Buff cockerels were shown. First cockerel was a grand bird, a nice golden-buff all over, good shape, fine legs and a little large in comb. Second was also a very fine bird, looks like brother, ran first very close. These were the two best Buff Rock birds in the show. Third was quite a bit younger and not the color or shape the other two were. There was another very young bird that should make a very good one later on.

First pullet was like first cockerel—very even in color, with nice shape and good legs. Second, another very nice pullet, was just as good in undercolor, but not quite as even in top color. Third loses in undercolor. I would like to see the Buff Rocks in larger classes.

The Barred Rock class was where the tug of war came in, and made up, I think, the largest and best ever shown at the Ontario. In all 187 birds were exhibited. First ald cock was a fine, large bird of good shape, good legs and comb. He was lighter in color than I like, but was the cleanest bird in the lot, not one tint of smoke or brass in any part of him and was the same from head to tail. Second, a grand, large bird of good shape and comb, was in color a dark bird, well barred and a nice blue, and ran first close. Third was a fine, large bird, well barred outside and a good shape but was not as clear as the other two. Fourth and fifth lacked the nice evenness of color and were off in undercolor. Sixth was not ready, but seventh, eighth and ninth were real good birds.

Barred Rock hens made up another good class. First hen was a beauty, a grand, large hen of a nice blue, very even color, well barred and a very hard hen to beat anywhere; wins with plenty to spare. Second good in color, a nice, light blue, like first, but not quite ready yet. Third was a fine, large hen of good shape, well barred and to the skin, but was not of that nice, light blue as were the others. Fourth, another large hen of good color and good shape, was more open in barring and did not end with black tip. Fifth, fine hen, well barred, nice blue in color and good legs, but had back tinted with old feathers. Sixth was a good, large hen, fine, clear back, good legs, nice color, but was too open in barring. The rest were real good hens but had not that nice, clear color.

Barred Rock cockerels were fifty in number and, taking them as a whole, the best ever seen at the Ontario. Fifteen or sixteen birds was what I call first-class, and if scored would go ninety and over. First cockerel was one of them you seldom see. He was grand in shape, fine in legs, good comb, in color a shade darker than I like, but like first cock, every bar was distinct and clear. Second was another winner with good surface color. Third, a fine, large bird, had good comb, good legs and stands well, is well barred, very even from head to tail, is not quite so bright as the first and second, but is a real good bird. Fourth, another grand bird with fine wing and tail, even in back, not so good in undercolor, but was a real fine bird. Seventh and eighth were not far behind sixth. Ninth was younger and not yet ready but had very fine barring and nice, bright color and when ready will make some of the others jump. Tenth was another good bird, but rather too dark. This was a hot class.

Barred Rock pullets made up another very hot class which was a long way ahead of last year's, being over fifty in number. The first was one of the nicest pullets I ever handled. She was very clean in color, a nice blue, every feather well barred and ending nice; grand in shape, good legs, splendid wings, and tail not quite out yet. Second, another good bird, was a shade darker in color, but finer in barring and a nice blue, grand in shape. Third was about the same color as first but more open in barring. Fourth was a very good pullet but not near the other three; she was well barred and nice in color, but back was not so clear and that was the great fault with the rest. Fifth was another grand, large pullet, a little more open in barring and with little brown tint in it. Sixth pullet was a younger one, very fine in barring and very blue in color; if it were not for the little smut in back would be a good one. If she clears out as a hen she will make a very hard one to beat. Seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth were good pullets, but not near the rest.

The tenth annual exhibition of the Fancier's Poultry Association of New Jersey will be held in Bamberger Auditorium, January 29 to February 3, next. They have a grand list of regular cash prizes and gold specials to distribute among the exhibitors. The Newark show of last year was the greatest success of any exhibition ever held in that state. The entries will close January 13. Send to T. Farrer Rackham, secretary, East Orange, N. J., for the premium list which is now ready for delivery.

Hartford, Conn., is to hold a show January 30 to February 2. This show will be held in the Auditorium, Asylum Street, Hartford, Conn. F. O. Grosbeck, secretary, Hartford, Conn., has ready for delivery the premium list for this occasion. This association will issue a souvenir catalogue. This style of catalogue was eagerly sought for last year. Send to Mr. Groesbeck for a copy of the premium list and enclose fifteen cents and he will mail you when finished, one of these catalogues, which will have all the premiums marked therein.

If interested in the great Chicago Show, send at once to Mr. Fred L. Kemmey, secretary, Wabash Avenue, Chicago, for the premium list from which to make your entries. The great Chicago Show follows Boston and Cincinnati.

The great New York Show will have ended by the time this copy of The Fancier reaches our many readers. It has been a great success in every way. The entries and attendance were most satisfactory to the management. But one week will intervene before both Boston and Cincinnati shows will be on hand. Both of these great events open the 15th of January. The American Poultry Association meets at Cincinnati Thursday, the 18th of January. Many facts of vital importance to the association and the fanciers at large will be considered at that meeting. All who can possibly do so should be in attendance.

The entries at Boston are even more than the management had hoped for. Secretary Roberts writes us that other business had so occupied his time that he did not have as much time to devote to the Boston Show as he should like to have given to its interest. Boston Show is to New England Fanciers what New York and Chicago are to their localities.

Mr. Scott Billman, Wooster, Ohio, has purchased a home on the Akron, Kent and Ravenna car line. He has in contemplation the building of a poultry plant adequate to his needs. All letters in the future for Mr. Billman should be directed to Cuyhoga Falls, Ohio, R. F. D.

We acknowledge receipt of a copy of the proceedings of the meeting of the Incubator Manufacturer's Association at Indianapolis. The incubator business has advanced to such proportions that the manufacturers of all hatching machinery have joined together in an effort to serve all who use their machinery better than ever before.

Martin's White Wyandottes won more prizes than any other exhibitor. First and Third Cockerel, First and Third Pullet, Second Cock, Second Hen and Second Pen. This was a remarkable win, owing to the fact that previous to this show they had been cooped nearly two weeks at the Toronto Show, and thus were not in as good condition as the birds they competed with.

"Good As Darling's"

Have you ever been told that when buying poultry foods? It is often said and it is complimentary to us because it recognizes Darling's as the standard. But it is not true. There are no other poultry foods as good as Darling's.

Darling's Beef Scraps
Are 62% Protein

Only 12% is fat. High in protein, low in fat. And unlike all other brands, the quality does not vary. Analysis proves this. That is where we took our stand originally. We have never departed from it. The high quality of Darling's Beef Scraps and all Darling Foods, has led up to the immense sale they have to-day.
Buy quality when you buy. The ordinary poultry foods are dear in comparison.

THE MONEY BRINGING LIST.

In addition to Beef Scraps and Beef Meal the following are leaders among the Darling Foods. All in 100 lb. bags, f. o. b. Chicago or New York, cash with order.

Laying Food . . . . . $2.00.	Scratching Food, . . . . . $2.00.
Forcing Food . . . . . $2.00.	Chick Feed . . . . . $2.50.

$8 80 FOR THIS STANDARD GREEN BONE CUTTER

Here is a bone cutter entirely different from any other on the market—every point of difference is an improvement. It feeds the bone endwise to the cutting knives automatically, thereby producing a much finer, better chipping than is possible in any other machine. Every poultryman knows the advantage of feeding fowls cut green bone. We want them to know how easy it is to prepare it. You can get the green bone fresh every day from your butcher at a trifling cost—it's no bother and very little work to prepare it with the STANDARD BONE CUTTER. Fed regularly green bone will double your egg supply, make eggs that will hatch strong, vigorous chicks, and keep your whole flock healthy and profitable. The money you spend for a bone cutter will return a profit to you every day. Machines are made in several sizes to suit large or small poultry raisers. Write today for free catalogue, prices, and our original Trial Plan.

More New Prairie State Improvements

SHOWING EGG TRAY SLIDES.

Have you noticed how many new improvements we have been publishing recently? And how important they all are to Incubator and Brooder users? The IMPROVED STANDARD PRAIRIE STATE INCUBATOR, our latest, and we think greatest, has 10 NEW FEATURES that make it a wonderfully efficient and convenient hatcher, as records of hatches made by users show. The EGG TRAY SLIDES, as shown on top of machine in illustration, are a great convenience. The NEW OPEN BOTTOM makes this a REAL FRESH AIR MACHINE. The NEW COMPENSATING REGULATOR is the most sensitive ever devised. These THREE improvements are contained in no other machine. We'd like for you to know about the other SEVEN, all explained in our new, free Standard catalog. Write today for it and ask also for Brooder Book describing our full line of New Brooders and Brooder improvements—the Universal Hover, for instance. Editorial Gossip

The display of poultry at Madison Square Garden the past week was undoubtedly the finest in every way that has ever been gathered in one hall in this country. There was less of inferiority and more of superiority than we have ever seen at one time. This is not a statement made for flattery, but the real fact as admitted by the World's fanciers that visited the show.

There was a greater number of entries than the Garden capacity can care for in good shape. Too many entries in the Garden is a detriment to the show. While there might not be any objection to the double tiering of the coops, as was done through necessity, there is a great objection to forcing so many of them back against the walls over the tiers of boxes on either side of the main arena.

The management fully realizes this, and we presume the remedy to be applied would be raising the entry to an amount that would bring in an equal amount of entries paid, and relieve the hall of at least one-third of the number that was gathered there this season. What the management may decide to do, is not fully known, but we believe that one-third less of the number of poultry and pigeons would make a more attractive display, and the raising of the entrance fee would improve the quality of all that came.

Three days of bad weather during the first of the week cast a gloom over the management and exhibitors as well. Thursday, Friday and Saturday were blessed with cheerful sunlight, and the people thronged the Hall almost in countless numbers. Thousands after thousands poured in to see the exhibit, and everyone who had anything to sell from a guinea pig to a 300-egg incubator, was kept constantly busy attending to the demands.

Newspaper row was an attractive feature of the show. Thousands of subscriptions were taken; books, pamphlets and periodicals of all kinds were in great demand, proving beyond all question the establishment of cultivated Standard-bred poultry throughout the land.

One of the most noticeable features of the show was the great improvement in hatching and rearing machinery. One of the first and foremost manufacturers of incubators, if not the oldest in the profession, remarked that he believed in five years from this time that hatching machinery of all kinds would be so simplified and improved as to make their manipulation even by the most inexperienced absolutely certain. This seems more than likely from the extensive improvements placed upon these appliances in the past twelve months.

Poultry appliances, poultry foods, poultry medicines of all kinds, in fact, everything possible to be made use of about the poultry yards was shown in the Garden. Bone cutters, patent regulators, trap nests, new-fashioned egg-testers, water fountains, poultry bits, grits and charcoal, and, in fact, everything that could be used in any way in the caring for poultry, was exhibited here for the benefit of the general public, and everyone seemed perfectly well satisfied with the results obtained.

All of this leads one to the conclusion that poultry growing has scarcely begun in this country. The demand for everything, the delight that everyone seems to take in caring for and keeping nice poultry is so strongly on the increase as to assure everyone of the greatest future for it.

Mr. Nettleton was there with a great lot of Light Brahmas. Philander Williams was strongly represented in Dark Brahmas. Both of these long-time New England exhibitors have the confidence of the poultry fraternity throughout the world. Those Plymouth Rocks of the ringlet quality, shown by Mr. E. B. Thompson, were the talk of the town. Edward remarked that he thought he "knew a Plymouth Rock" when he saw it.

Mr. Victor Bradley was there, so were the Bradley Bros.' Plymouth Rocks. The cockerel that won the first was so handsomely treated as to have the inside of his coop trimmed with light blue silk, the front decorated with ribbons and garlands of flowers, and a sign placed on the front: "CHAMPION, Barred Plymouth Rock Cockerel, valued at $1,000."

Mr. A. C. Hawkins had an eye to the beautiful, and his Barred Plymouth Rocks were a grand collection. They were the kind that have the size, the strength, the vigor, and a combination of qualities most valuable in this variety. Friend A. C. complimented the "Feather" on the beautiful cartoon presented of him in the January issue. Said he: "How did you get the picture? I tried to prevent your obtaining one." But he could not. His picture and that of Charlie Wells attracted great attention in the Garden Show.

F. W. Corey was there in charge of General McAlpin's display. Corey knows how to fix them for the show; he had them right up on edge in beautiful condition, and he reaped in a lot of ribbons for his principal. We congratulate the General on his successful maiden trip to Madison Square Garden. But few have accomplished so much at their first appearance. Frank Gaylor, of Gedney Farm, was on hand with a great lot of Plymouth Rocks, Orpingtons, Minorcas and Indian Games. Oh, what beauties they were, and how Frank smiled as he passed among them to cater to the wants of the many applicants for stock and eggs from his farm. Gedney Farm is located near White Plains, quite accessible to New Yorkers and quite popular with them.

Those Columbian Wyandottes shown by August D. Arnold, were the pride of the show. The cockerel in the breeding pen that won first is a tribute to Brother Arnold's ability to produce Light Brahma-colored Wyandottes. On every side was heard the statement: "They are the coming variety." We were rather disposed to think that they had already come when we saw the grand quality in Mr. Arnold's breeding pen. W. R. Richardson was on hand with a lot of fine ones as well. He and Mr. Arnold seemed to be the leading champions of this variety in the East.

We congratulate Mr. Wyckoff on his display of Leghorns. We were more than pleased with the new varieties, as well as the Black Leghorns shown by him. It is of great benefit to the fancy to have someone connected with it willing to send abroad and bear the expense of bringing amongst us beautiful new varieties of poultry. Dr. A. H. Phelps has become a giant among poultry fanciers. His great display of Faverolles and Lakenvelders created quite a stir among visitors at the Garden. New and catchy things are of great advantage to a show and the Doctor has them of the finest.

Mr. H. V. Crawford, Secretary and General Manager of the New York Show, is the most successful of all show secretaries in this country. For seventeen years he has stood the brunt and annoyance, until it has become a simple matter of hours and attention to him. His ever faithful assistant, Chas. M. Griffin, Treasurer, was on hand, as pleasant and obliging as ever.

No one could be more obliging, efficient and capable than Mr. Charles Chamberlain, of the press department of Madison Square Garden. Mr. Chamberlain has been there for years, and his ability increases each twelve months. We can not remember of ever having seen such good work done at any poultry show as was observed in the daily press of New York during show week, all coming from the masterly hand of Mr. Chamberlain. Without Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Crawford the New York Show would not be itself.

A number of Mr. Parker's friends attended his funeral Saturday afternoon. A tribute of respect was pledged for Mrs. Parker. We do not remember of ever having seen an equal display of sorrow and regret over the death of any brother fancier, unless it might have been the late John L. Cost. Both of these departed fanciers were much beloved by the entire poultry fraternity of this country and Canada.

We are in receipt of a letter from Mr. T. E. Orr, Secretary of the American Poultry Association, in which he states that he had nothing whatever to do with proposing the new amendments to the Constitution; that he knew nothing of them and had never seen them until they came to him for consideration. We imagine from Mr. Orr's letter that he is not in the least inclined in favor of them.

Mr. J. Hart Welch, of Douglaston, L. I., reports that he has lost a Rose Comb Brown Leghorn cock bird, missing from Pen No. 2083, Band No. 32, fourth prize. Anyone having received this bird will oblige Mr. Welch by notifying him at the above address.

Mr. C. E. Schofield, proprietor of the Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts, reports the loss of a Pigmy Pouter in the New York show. Anyone having received the odd one please report to him.

Some people tell us that geese can be successfully raised if they have a large tin pan full of water to drink from and wash in. We should rather not attempt to raise geese than to attempt to grow them in this fashion. Pekin ducks will do fairly well under such conditions, but geese will not prosper very well.

The New York Show is a thing of memory but it was the greatest of all ever held in the famous Madison Square Garden. Nearly seven thousand birds made quite a showing. Double tiering on the main floor and in the gallery was necessary in order to accommodate the big entry.

Secretary Crawford and his superintendent "Jack" Haynes and "Barney" Mosher were very busy all the week and handled a most trying situation in the most effective and satisfactory manner. Spratts did the cooping and feeding, and as usual did the work in perfect form. Uncle "Tom" Rackham has lost none of his ability in cooping and feeding big shows, and his assistants Smith and Braun are entitled to much credit for the part they played in the big production.

The quality of the birds on exhibition was, of course the best ever seen at the Garden. Most of the leading varieties had "quality to burn" with a big share of quantity "to boot."

The Light Brahmas dropped in numbers but had splendid quality in each and every class. This good old breed is still on earth and may get back to its proper place in fowldom, viz: the band wagon.

It hurt our feelings somewhat to see so few Dark Brahmas, good as they were. There is something wrong in the fancy when such a handsome fowl is so completely neglected.

The Cochin class teemed with quality but might have been more numerous. We regret to say that Langshans were not represented at Madison Square Garden as they should have been. The quality was good, but the quantity minus. What a pity? Too much commercialism in the poultry business is killing some of the best old breeds extant.

Barred Plymouth Rocks made up a combination hard to beat. All the "big guns" had birds, and a lot of the smaller breeders were represented. Judges Lambert and Schwab had plenty of hard work to do and we doubt if any living person envied them their job. The plum tree dropped its fruit very promiscuously and there was no walk-over for any of the shining lights in Barred Rockdom. White and Buff Rocks were magnificent in quality and great in numbers.

The Wyandotte classes were fine and are referred to in some special reports in this issue. Columbian Wyandottes are booming and no mistake. Birds were sold at big prices and we expect to see an even greater and larger show at New York next year than the great one just passed.

Orpingtons were represented by great classes, full of quality, and were in fact a surprise to many not acquainted with the fine qualities of the different varieties of this new and popular breed.

Mr. George "Pan" Burgott had his hands full judging Leghorns, the classes being filled to the high water mark, but Burgott knows a Leghorn, and did the hard and conscientious work he is noted for to the satisfaction of most exhibitors.

All we can say about the Minorca classes is: They were "fine and dandy," to use a current phrase. Mr. Northup tells all about them in another column of this issue.

Polish and Hamburgs were fine in quality but not as largely represented as their good qualities demand.

Rhode Island Reds were simply immense in numbers and elegant in quality.

The good old Dorkings were represented by some beautiful birds, but we should like to have seen more of them. It hurts the writer of these notes to think that such a fine breed as the Dorking is so little appreciated in this country.

The French classes were light and we regret to say it. Houdans and La Fleche are fowls of intrinsic merit and better than many other, but more popular varieties.

The Indian Game classes were fine, the best we have seen in a number of years, and Dr. Wolfe judged them in his quiet and effective manner. While there was some difference of opinion regarding the placing of the awards in these classes, no one questioned the Doctor's integrity and very few his ability to handle such strong classes.

Rosemary Farm had a walk-over on White Indian Games with a beautiful bunch of birds.

Mr. A. A. Parker died at his home in Dunellen, N. J., January 4th, and was buried on Saturday, January 6th, at Madison, N. J. A number of his friends attending the New York Show attended the funeral. The loss of such a fine fancier and true friend is particularly hard on those who knew him best. The writer of these notes was fortunate in being a close friend of Mr. Parker, and looks back with pleasure to the many happy and profitable hours spent in his company. The Game Bantam fancy loses one of the most sterling and successful breeders the United States has produced.

We also learn with deep regret of the death of Mr. Harrison Weir, one of England's oldest and most noted poultry and animal artists. We look back upon a number of thoroughly fancier like letters received by us from Mr. Weir. It was a treat to read them for the spirit of sincerity and intelligence was a leading feature in all his "talks" on matters appertaining to fowl and other domesticated animals.

Lost from the Madison Square Garden Show, a Silver Spangled Hamburg cockerel, leg band 29. Anyone having the same will confer a favor by notifying the owner.—W. Tunnicliffe, Elizaville, N. J.

Rock Holland Farm did well in the winnings at the Kingston show. Full report of the awards will be found in the January 6th American Fancier. Mr. M. C. Van Winkle is the proprietor of this farm.

Mr. J. L Boydon reports from Virginia that he has a freak, one-half bantam, one-half Blue Game. He reports that this pullet laid an egg about the size of a Guinea egg when about three and one-half months old.

Mr. Wm. T. Liddell, of Greenwich, N. Y., has sold to Rosemary Farm his entire lot of Single-combed Brown Leghorns, including his show birds. Mr. Liddell will devote his attention in the future to Rose-combed Browns, of which he keeps the best.

We are just in receipt of a copy of Poultry Feeding for Profit, a beautiful little book issued by Chas. Cyphers, the manufacturer of Model incubators and brooders. This book is free to all who may address this company at 39 Henry Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Standard bone cutters from Milford, Mass., are gradually working their way into the homes of many poultrymen. Green cut bone is recognized as an absolute necessity for laying hens in winter, and the Standard bone cutter is made for the purpose of doing this work as speedily as possible with the least amount of labor. We have before us a comunication that states as follows: "The Standard bone cutter cuts green bone just right for feeding. The self-feeder is quite an addition and help to the manipulator. This machine will cut up the bones that are often thrown away and make good food out of them."

At times both the mother goose and the goslings are troubled with insect vermin or lice. When this is the case rub some sweet oil on the throat underneath the bill and dust Persian insect powder on the bodies down close to the skin. We have seen both geese and ducks that were deprived of plenty of water to bathe in, as badly infested with lice as ever were poultry of any kind, and, when such is the case, it is much more troublesome to rid them of this pest.

The old geese make the best mothers for the goslings.

DR. GEORGE W. LITTLE

THE originator of the Gallery of Fame takes delight in presenting Dr. George W. Little, of Glens Falls, New York, to the fancy, as a philanthropist, a physician of great ability, a lover of pheasants and a grower of the most beautiful orchids in the world. Dr. Little celebrated his great success by distributing among his eighteen hundred patients the most beautiful souvenir spoon ever designed as a remembrance. If there were more like the Doctor the world would be better. May he never find time to leave us.

THE GREAT NEW YORK SHOW

Largest and Best Display of Poultry and Pigeons Ever Exhibited at Madison Square Garden

Secretary Crawford and his co-workers in the management of the Garden Show of America are to be congratulated on the achievement of the most surprising success in the management of the Poultry Show, the seventeenth annual exhibit of which was held in Madison Square Garden the first week in January. The largest entry ever gathered in the Garden is the record of the present year. Over 6,000 individual entries, many of which contained from five to twenty specimens, were given to the Garden Show of 1906, and a record of having cared for nearly 8,000 specimens of the feathered tribe, is a credit to the management.

Of these there were the following divisions:

Open class poultry entries, 3,342; exhibition yard poultry entries, 266; single entries in the pigeon classes, 1,851; display and exhibition, 115; pet stock, 114; cats, 232; cage birds, 171; total, 6,091.

The Garden was most beautifully decorated with flags, banners, emblems and bunting. The coops for the poultry were staged in double tiers, or one coop upon another. This was made necessary in order to handle the enormous entry. Pigeons and bantams were cooped in the balconies built over the boxes on either side of the exhibition yards, and display pens crossed the hall in the centre each way. The newspaper booths were located across the Fourth Avenue end of the hall. Incubators and like displays were against the side walls on both sides of the Garden. Cage birds, bees and honey exhibits were in the restaurant in the Madison Avenue entrance. The cats, as usual, were on the second floor.

Monday being a holiday there was necessarily some delay in the opening of the exhibition. Judging began promptly at noon Tuesday and was all finished in the afternoon of Wednesday. Some of the classes were very large and difficult to handle. This was true to a great extent with the Barred Plymouth Rocks, White Wyandottes and Single Comb White Leghorns. These were pronounced by some as the "banner" classes. We should add to these the White Plymouth Rocks and the Orpingtons as almost, if not the equal of any of them.

Pigeons and bantams were a show to themselves. It is astonishing to notice the great development in the pigeon classes. But a few years ago Pigmy Pouters were a novelty. Here they were gathered in large numbers and of such surprising quality as to almost astonish the experts themselves. As for grace, beauty, pouter quality and color, the pigmies are at present fully the equal of the larger pouter. Bantams of all breeds and varieties, almost a countless throng, were gathered at the left of the hall as you entered, elevated on staging over the boxes. These being largely encouraged by the Game Bantam and National Bantam Associations, have become one of the leading features of the New York Show. The most expert fanciers of the country pay attention to these miniature fowls. In grace and finish they excel anything of poultry kind that is grown.

The display of cage birds, cats and pet stock of all kinds leads one to imagine that all mankind—as well as kind woman—had turned attention to the production of beautifully formed, but strange appearing freaks to satisfy the demand of fancies which makes it possible to dispose of Canary birds and long-haired Guinea Pigs at fabulous prices.

ASIATIC CLASSES.

Fifty-three Light Brahmas and eleven Dark Brahmas were shown in the open classes, and six exhibition yards of the light variety. Rather a small showing in comparison with some of the classes of recent years. For quality and excellent condition the prizes were well placed. One could not help being attracted to the beautifully moulded birds selected as the winners. In the hens and pullets the color and marking were superb, the dark Brahmas being a most attractive lot. It was a pleasure to see the name of the old "wheel horse" of the fancy, Philander Williams, among the successful in the Dark Brahma classes.

Now Owned by Edw. Oyster

Buff Cochins were fine in form and color; although the pullets were not so well matured as we should like to see them. The display of Partridge Cochins and White Cochins must meet the approval of those most particular for Cochin quality. The Black Cochins shown would scarcely rank with the others, yet it might be said that they were considerably above the average of this variety.

In the Barred Plymouth Rock classes, the giants of the fancy stalked forth to combat for the prizes. When men such as the Bradley Brothers, E. B. Thompson and A. C. Hawkins, "gird on the armor" for warfare in Barred Plymouth Rock Alley, great things are to be looked for. These, with other great lights in the profession, showed in the open classes the grandest lot of Barred Plymouth Rocks ever gathered under one canvas for the purpose of prize winning, and showing the public just what could be produced in them. So many of the highest quality were left without the award limit that one could scarcely draw a line just where quality ceased. As expressed by an expert of the highest standing, fifty blue ribbons might have been justly awarded in these classes with every one of them fully meriting the award.

We must admit having been carried away with the beauty and quality of the White Plymouth Rocks. Size, shape, color, grand condition, everything necessary to make a fine display, was embodied in this exhibit, one hundred and seventy-five in the open class and twenty-one exhibition yards making a total of 280 most attractive, beautifully white, elegantly formed specimens. Some of the hens and pullets might be selected as models for all Plymouth Rocks. The master-hand at producing fine poultry was strongly in evidence. So much of quality was not included in the list of awards that the fortunate ones are to be more than congratulated upon their success, and those less fortunate highly complimented on the excellence of their exhibit. Buff Plymouth Rocks did not equal the Whites in number, although quality was good throughout.

First cockerel and second cock bird in Barred Plymouth Rocks went to Bradley Brothers on two beautiful specimens. When these people go into the Exhibition Hall, they usually go loaded to win, with specimens well calculated to do the trick. Third cock bird and first and second pens, which went to E. B. Thompson, were wonders of their kind. The grand string of males and females shown by A. C. Hawkins was greatly admired by every one. There was some dissatisfaction in the classes, but not nearly as much as usual. Experts differed very much as to the placing of the award on pullets, the contention being based upon the fact that the pullet was very much undersize, and did not have her main tail feathers well grown. The Standard states that you shall deduct two points per pound for under standard weight. It was only claimed that this pullet weighed five pounds. This alone would take three points from her score. If, cut as she should have been, two points for short tail, this would have been five points deducted without other defects. The shape of the neck, head and breast deserved considerable attention in the matter of defects. We can not imagine that the pullet, properly scored, could have exceeded eighty-nine points, yet she was awarded the blue ribbon, while the second pullet, grand in every requirement, must have gone over weight, and was complete throughout her entire plumage. Instances of this kind create the impression that comparison judging is a careless method. While it is not a careless method, it may be carelessly applied.

The White Plymouth Rocks, as before stated, were a most beautiful lot. The pullets winning the prizes in White Plymouth Rocks were grand in size and general makeup, as were all the specimens selected. Buff Plymouth Rocks were good in every way, except that many of the pullets were immature. A hen belonging to R. L. Hutchings was grand in every particular, having size, color and general makeup. There seemed to be a divided opinion about this hen and the quality of the one winning the first position; surely they were grand good specimens.

In Silver Penciled Plymouth Rocks, Rockhill Poultry Farm and Exmoor Farm contended for supremacy. The Silver Penciled Plymouth Rocks and the Partridge Plymouth Rocks as well had a very strong representation in the show. The Black Wyandottes were a splendid fine lot. The placing of the award grades them just as they belong. The young stock, remarkably good, shows great improvement over other years. Black Langshans, twenty-five in the open classes, were better in quality than for several years. Two White Langshans traveled alone on the path of glory, wishing, we presume, that more might come and join them another year.

The Orpington people seem determined to force upon the world the excellence of their poultry. We should class this display next to the Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes. In Single and Rose-Comb Buffs, and Single and Rose-comb Blacks, and Single-comb Whites, number and quality were rampant; the winners being wonderful specimens. All the other varieties were strongly represented. We were informed by Mr. Cook that their sales had gone far beyond their expectations. Gedney Farm had a grand display of Buff Orpingtons, all of which seem to have been grown by them on their own farm, showing the possibility of producing great quality in these in this country. Mr. Cook and Mr. Gaylor both informed us that they were more than gratified at the outcome of the sales department during the show. Others reported equal success. The demand for these fowls does not seem to lag in the least.

In the Mediterranean classes, the quality was remarkably good. Single-comb White Leghorns were among the strongest of these. Mr. Young was most fortunate in his winnings, having captured a number of prizes on birds that must have been wonders to have gained supremacy here. Mr. Wykoff, of Ithaca, had a grand display. It is encouraging to record the fact that a large per cent. of the entire exhibit in Leghorns was within the range of proper carriage of tail according to the new Standard.

Brown Leghorn Alley was most attractive during the entire show. There was a large gathering of Brown Leghorns. One fancier remarked that he had never seen such beautiful striping as on the second cockerel. There went from Washington to this show a Miss Pitchlyn with some Brown Leghorn pullets. Her pleasing ways and pleasant manners won her a world of friends. The New York press took pleasure in speaking complimentary of herself and her beautiful Browns. She captured the New York Show, and was elected first Vice President of the Brown Leghorn Club. Mr. James Forsythe, who was kept out of the New York Show as a competitive exhibitor for a number of years, from the fact that he is a member of the Board of Directors, came to New York this time with some display coops of the grand quality always shown by Riverside Farm. One display pen contained a dozen or fifteen pullets of the mammoth size grown by him, ranging from six to seven and a half pounds each, and the cockerel penned with them looked as if he might tip the scales at about nine pounds. These are the type of Brown Leghorns so extensively sought for from Maine to California for the combined purpose of producing eggs and market poultry.

The display of Buff Leghorns, Black Leghorns and all kinds of Rose-comb Leghorns was most attractive. The Browns shown by Mr. Kulp, of Pennsylvania, were most beautiful in their make-up.

Black Minorcas, both single comb and rose comb were shown in quantities. As usual, Mr. Arthur Trethaway was there looking for ribbons. The first cock bird was a wonder of his kind. He came from Pittsburg, the property of Mr. Hildorfer. Mr. Trethaway, as the records show, won second cock bird, third hen, first, third and fifth cockerels, second and third pullets on a well deserved string of birds. Mr. Trethaway also won first pen on a lot of beauties. White Minorcas were surprisingly good, and show a disposition to push well along in contention with the Blacks.

Rose-comb Black Minorcas attracted great attention. Mr. Northup was there with some of the descendants of those thousand dollar birds that went abroad, and they were crackerjacks and did the trick. But when Mr. Northup prepares himself for an exhibition of these, he usually takes the prize winners with him under his arm.

The Polish classes were remarkably good, especially the White-Crested Blacks, which brought together very large classes of most excellent quality to contend for the specials that were offered, and it was Nip and Tuck between the lot to see which could do the best.

Rhode Island Reds extended their banner through many aisles. There were hundreds of them and the quality was remarkable. According to some of the New England fanciers, the exhibit was right up in quality. The New England Rhode Island Red people were at the New York Show to see what they could find better than they had at home. One of them said, "Quality seems to be moving toward New York?" It is said that some two hundred and fifty of the Rose-comb variety will go from New England to the Cincinnati Show. This should be good for the variety; most certainly satisfactory to the management at Cincinnati.

As usual Mr. Westfall and Henry Hales were on hand with a fine lot of Dorkings. Houdans were more numerous than the Dorkings, and of good quality. A few other French varieties were shown. We are at loss to know why the display of Dorkings have been permitted to go behind. If they had been pushed as hard as the Orpingtons have they might occupy the position that the Orpingtons have gained. Surely there are no better fowls than the English Dorkings.

Pit Games have become a great feature at the New York Show. If any one will name a kind of Game that was not present, we are certain that some one of the Game enthusiasts will hunt it up and have it on deck for exhibition another year.

We were more than delighted with the display of Indian Games. Mr. Kirby, as usual had a lot of nice ones. Gedney Farm has made a reputation as experts in Indian Games. They have a beautiful lot of promising young stock. A few of the White Indian Games were shown. Exhibition Games of all kinds to the usual limited extent were shown.

Our friend, Dr. Phelps, was there with his long line of beautiful Faverolles and Lakenvelders. Oh, how the Doctor does admire them! What beautiful specimens he has produced in them! He is the man who changed the belief that Faverolles could not be grown in this country, by taking hold of them and producing more than two thousand in one season. The Lakenvelders, the black and white Leghorns, the great egg-producing fowl of Germany, have come to stay, says the Doctor, because they are worthy of cultivation, being both beautiful and splendid egg-producers.

The display of water fowls and turkeys was not large enough in numbers. The quality was good, but numbers did not compare in proportion to other displays and classes of the show.

In Game Bantams there was an endless throng of beauty and quality. Sadness spread over the feelings of the entire bantam fancy as the ribbons were placed upon the coops. The light of A. A. Parker's life had fled, and the hero of many a wonderful contention for supremacy in the Garden, he the well-beloved, highly considered judge of Game Bantams went to his long home just as the club of which he was treasurer was holding its meeting in the Garden Hall. Poor Parker is gone never more to return, but he has left behind an impression of his ability upon the little Game Bantam that will be remembered long years hence by all those familiar with his life. One might spend hours commenting on the quality of these little beauties and describing individual specimens. When we say that they were grand in every respect and all that might be hoped for, the entire truth has been said.

Buff Cochin Bantams, White Cochin Bantams and Partridge Cochin Bantams, were shown in quantity and quality, all through the line. The Sebrights surpassed any like exhibit. Rose-comb Bantams almost equaled the banner year. Japanese Bantams, Polish Bantams, both Light and Dark Brahma Bantams, Plymouth Rock Bantams, and other minor varieties represent these miniature fowls. As usual ex-President Orr brought down from his locality a lot of beautiful Brahma Bantams that speak well for the quality reared by this gentleman. The dark Brahma Bantams were grand in quality and very attractive in every way.

To Hatch Duck Eggs

A chicken hen or an incubator is the best for hatching duck eggs, unless you have a breed of ducks that have been trained for years to hatch and rear their own young through having it to do. We owned a flock of Rouen ducks that always laid in a barrel that was turned down for them, that hatched their own eggs and reared their own young.

MINORCAS AT NEW YORK

The magnificent display of Minorcas at Madison Square Garden Show was a great surprise to many admirers of this excellent breed, because it was known that several of the old time exhibitors were unprepared to show, but the exhibit has proven that the gap could be more than filled by new exhibitors. The entire exhibit of Minorcas out-numbered any former exhibit of Minorcas at the Garden by just seventy birds. There were 213 Minorcas in this show including exhibition yards, and the nearest approach to that number in past years was 143 birds. This shows the increasing favor in which Minorcas are being held and the influence of the Minorca club in bringing out an exhibit. Further the exhibit shows that the great popularity of Rose Comb Black Minorcas is not in any way retarding the progress of the Single Combs, because there were about forty more Single Comb Blacks than have been shown in any previous Madison Square Garden Show. Nor are the greater numbers shown at the expense of quality. It is remarkable that out of all this number of Minorcas there were only two birds which were not entitled to have won first according to the rules of the Standard, had there not been better birds in the class. In this respect I believe the Minorca class surpassed all others in the show. The writer of this judged the Single Comb Blacks and Whites and examined closely every section in every bird in the competition.

In the Single Comb Black Minorca class, the first prize cock was the admiration of all who saw him. He had great size, coral red comb, face, wattles, plumage in perfect condition, pure white lobes, strong back and body, and long flowing tail. He was closely followed by second cock, which was also much admired. The third prize cock was a grand large bird, shown in good condition except one wattle which had been injured. Fourth cock was a large strong bird and had the best comb of all the ten cock birds exhibited, but was a little white in face and tail not being well grown in kept him out of a better place.

The first hen was a star in her class. She was in the best posible condition for showing, had a nearly perfect comb, grand white lobes, red face, fine plumage and was fine in every point which goes to make a sure winner. Second hen was a very close competitor. There was but very little difference between her and the first hen; just enough difference to thow them out of a tie. Third hen was another grand one but needed about three weeks time to be in her finest condition. Fourth hen was also a fine grand one which received much praise and the fifth hen could have won first easily in many of our shows. Several others in the class were worthy of special mention but space will not permit.

In cockerels we had the largest class of the Minorca exhibit, thirty-two birds, all good ones, but enough variation to make it easy to place the awards. The first cockerel was shown in perfect condition of plumage, every feather seemed to be at full length and all in. He had an excellent comb, perfect lobes, red face, long body, full breast and was in every way a typical Minorca. Second cockerel was another grand bird and has the distinction of winning the ten dollar cash special for the Black Minorca male having the best comb, competing with forty-nine Single Comb males for that honor. Had the special been for the best male head he would still have won it because he had perfect lobes, pure red face, and perfectly shaped wattles. His plumage was green black throughout, and he was well shaped in every section. Third cockerel would have taken first place had it not been for the loss of one sickle, and a quill in one wing being broken. He was a magnificent bird and stood second in the race for distinction of best comb. He also has an excellent color of plumage. Fourth cockerel was another large bird, consideraby above standard weight with an excellent comb and proved by winning fourth that he was capable of winning over twenty-nine good cockerels which is the equivalent of winning first in a larger class of Minorca cockerels than has ever before appeared in the "Garden." For a Minorca cockerel to win any prize in this class was an enviable acquisition, for there were cockerels among those without a place, which could easily have won in some of the strong classes we have seen in this show in former years.

In pullets there were twenty-seven entries. Every one was in her place and though all were out on dress parade they did not lose the opportunity to demonstrate that they were the greatest layers of the greatest size of fine white eggs. The first prize pullet was a perfect gem, greatly admired by all who saw her. She was not fully matured, and yet was above standard weight. In the dim light of the coop, or taken out in the brightest light of day, she showed the most beautiful green sheen in every section of her plumage. From every standpoint she was a typical Minorca. The second pullet was a little further matured than the first and at first glance seemed to deserve first prize, but the condition of her plumage was not quite equal to that of the first pullet, which fact determined the awards. The third, fourth and fifth pullets were grand birds, worthy in proportion to their places.

Between the five best pens there was only enough difference in value to determine the respective awards. In first pen there were four large hens and a grand cockerel. All were very evenly matched. Second pen had very fine hens, and the cockerel, while a very large stylish bird, was not quite equal to the cockerel in first pen. Third pen did not run quite so even. In it was one hen, probably the best in all the pens, and the other three hens were choice birds but the cockerel was short in body, comb had been frosted and plumage was not in good condition. The fourth pen was well selected, with evenly matched, good birds but which were not quite so large birds as those in the first mentioned pens.

The White Minorcas made up a small class. The first prize winners were of excellent type and quality, but the balance of the class was about what we see in ordinary shows.

The Rose Comb Blacks were a large class of very excellent quality consisting of nine cocks, seven hens, nine cockerels, nine pullets and one pen. As I did not judge this class and was one of the exhibitors, I will not comment on the birds separately, but will say that that they were a fine lot of Rose Comb Black Minorcas and anyone who won a prize in this competition may well feel proud of the winning.

I never handled a class of birds where everyone seemed better pleased with his winnings. Each one appreciated and accepted his share in a spirit of fairness and seemed to feel that he had done well to win as much as he did, in such strong competition. It was gratifying to me to hear it frequently remarked that none of the Minorca exhibitors had expressed any dissatisfaction with the awards.

Ornamental Bantams

The Ornamental Bantam classes had quality and quantity to burn. Had they been better cooped they would have made a show in themselves. Over three hundred were shown with hardly a poor one in the lot.

Cochin Bantams were fine all through, especially the Buff hens. The winner was a wonder in shape, color and feathering. In Blacks the first cock was an easy winner, although in this class there were unplaced birds fit to win in good company. The first and second hens almost even up, second probably last on condition. Cockerels and pullets made up large classes of grand birds. Partridge Cochins were better than last year, especially the winning hen. Whites were also very much improved, making it hard to chose between the winners. First cock was very white and good in feather, although second was better shaped. First hen was an old winner. Many good birds were unplaced in this class. The cockerels and pullets were very good especially the winning pullet.

Golden Sebrights had very good classes and winners were well placed. The winning cock was a trifle high on legs but fine in lacing. First hen wins well. Cockerels and pullets brought out a number of beauties. Silver Sebrights did not have as large classes as the Goldens, but were as good in quality especially in lacing. The winning hen was an ideal Sebright.

Black Rose Combs had some very hot classes. The winning cock was a beauty, closely followed by second. Hens also showed up well, the fourth hen being about perfect in comb and lobes. In the cockerel class were some of the best shown in New York in several years. With the exception of the first, changing the awards could not have caused any criticism. Pullets were also a grand lot.

Japanese Bantams were well represented in all colors. First white cock was a beauty and second Black Tailed cock a grand Japanese, but a little brassy.

The balance of classes were made up of some fine Polish in various colors, Silkies and large classes of Light Brahmas. Some nice Dark Brahmas were also shown especially the cock and hen which were almost up to the large variety in color. Plymouth Rocks brought out some nice cockerels and pullets, but a number of them are still too large to be considered bantams.—CHAS. M. SMITH.

Wyandottes at New York

In the White Wyandotte class forty cocks competed and a grand old lot they were. The five that sported the ribbons could have all been run in the same mold, save for a little coarseness in the head of the second and the pale shanks of the fourth. We honestly believe that the five winners could have been removed and five others of fully as good quality could have been selected.

Fifty-one hens were entered and were of more varied type than the cocks. The first was a pure white hen with fine yellow shanks and a good winner. The second was also a fine hen, but shanks were too green to win the high honor given her. The third was another fine one and the fourth, while small in size, had quality enough to win her the ribbon. The fifth was worthy of her place.

Seventy-one were entered in the cockerel class. The first was out of coop when we were taking notes, evidently getting photographed. The second was a very white bird and White Wyandotte all over, but lacking in blockiness. The third, except for a rather smooth comb we considered as good as those in the money. The fifth was a large bird with good colored eye and shank.

In the pullet class sixty-five were entered. The first was shown in grand condition and a good winner. The second was a very large pullet approaching the Cochin type. The third and fourth were good enough to win any place in any company. The fifth was too short in comb to give the true Wyandotte shape to head. Pens had twenty-three in the class and we think were the best lot of White Wyandottes ever shown in the Garden.

Silver Wyandottes were represented in the cock class by eleven birds. The first was a grand bird in color and shape. The second was not quite as good in color as the winner. The third had a poor comb and the fourth and fifth were good birds.

Hens made up a class of ten and a corking good lot they were. The first was grand in back lacing, but poor in comb. The second was a little mossy in back lacing. The third could have been placed first without much kicking from anybody. The fourth and fifth were good ones.

Twelve cockerels were entered with awards placed all right. The first was a gem in wing color. Pullets had a class of sixteen. The first was almost perfect in color, but not equal to the second in type and comb. The third, fourth and fifth were all birds of remarkable lacing.

Five pens were exhibited. The first was a grand pen and showed careful selection. The others were good birds, but we wish to speak particularly of the cockerel that headed the pen of Dr. Beckett. We think him the finest Silver Wyandotte male it was ever our good fortune to handle, and we would unhesitatingly have given him the blue in the open class.

That there has not been enough attention paid to the Golden Wyandotte Comb was in evidence in the Golden Wyandotte class, for while they have lacing almost perfect, the combs of a majority of them show neglect. Eight birds were entered in the cock class. The first was a grand bird of true type. The second was a much coarser bird, quite leggy in appearance, and the third showed white in sickles. Hens were a good uniform lot, the first being a gem.

Ten cockerels were shown. The first was a grand top colored bird and the second, though not as good in shape, was grand in breast lacing. The third was a little inclined to reachiness in back. The pullet class consisted of seven entries and they were a very typical lot with awards placed right.

Three pens were exhibited. Our preference was for the second pen, but as we did not handle them and presume the judge did, we will have to say the awards were placed right.—GEO. W. WEED.

SINGLE COMB BLACK MINORCA

Ducks seem to lose the instinct of hatching their own eggs sooner than any other fowl. If this is not cultivated in them every year, they do not seem to care for it. Pekin ducks are a non-setting variety, made so, we believe, through not having the opportunity to hatch their eggs for so many years.

Indian Games at Madison Square Garden Show

Not since the memorable display of Cornish Indians, in 1899, has there been such a fine lot shown at the Garden as this year. Fifty in the open class, and quality reigning supreme, speaks volumes for this grand breed.

The cock class had eight entries. The first was a bird of rare type and color. and good in head points, fine tail, carried at correct angle, large boned, and great substance, with feathers as hard as nails. The second was much like the first, but inferior in shape of back. Third was a grand old cock. Great in bone and substance, low down shanks, but fails in hackle and flights. The head was good, with small comb, and was best coop trained bird in the class. He certainly was a "poser," reminding one of old "Rajah." Fourth was grand in shape and good in color, but fails in comb, it being lopped. Fifth was also a good bird, but flights were badly broken showing white tips. Number 2654 was the best cock in class, in shape and color, and would have won first but for a slight disqualification.

Fifteen hens were entered. The first was grand in bone, substance and station, beautifully laced in all sections and a hard one to beat. Second was close to first in all respects, failing to first only on lacing on back. Third was similar to second. Fourth was ideal in shape, failing in color and lacing, a large hen, and if she were well marked would be a world beater. Fifth was a large typical Indian female, but fails in color. Numbers 2659, 2660 and 2670 were all fine hens, and would be winners in classes of not so keen competition as at the Garden. Number 2662 was best colored female in the classes. Not placed because of her shape and high station.

Cockerels made up a class of thirteen. First was fine in bone and station, with good head, large body and fine tail and altogether a very showy bird in coop.

Second, a very good bird, was a little shorter on shanks than first, with good head, finely shaped body and tail carried at proper angle. Failed to first only on condition. Third was a very large bird, failing in neck. This cockerel had good comb, but was not so good in station as first or second. Fourth was good in shape and color and would have gone higher but for comb. Fifth, a fine bird of good color, failed in shape.

Pullets were fourteen in number. First was ideal in Standard shape, much like fourth hen and by far the best shaped pullet in her class. She had a perfect pea comb close to her head, good brow, wattles small, and good lobes, in fact it was a perfect Indian female head. Good neck and hackle, and beautiful double lacing on breast and over wing were noticeable. The outer lacing was a little too heavy, preventing the ground color from showing to best advantage; but she opens well upon handling, and fails only in color and lacing on back. Second was better color than first, but fails on shape and head points. Third was much like second in shape and color. Fourth a fine pullet, was good in both shape and color, and would have gone higher but for comb. Fifth, a very good bird, had a good color, but fails to others on shape.

Three pens were entered. The first contained four hens and cock bird. The cock was a typical shaped Indian, good bone and station, failing on comb and purple barring. The four females were all very fine in type and lacing. Second pen consisted of a cockerel and four pullets, all fine in type. One of the pullets would have made things lively in the open class. The females failed on color of shanks. The owner of these two pens should feel proud of them. The third failed very materially to second on shape of female.

WHITE INDIANS.

The classes contained one each, cock, hen, cockerel, pullet and pen. We believe they were the best White Indians ever shown at the Garden, being large in size, fine shape and station. The plumage was pure white, short and hard, and every bird shown in fine condition.—Dr. J. S. Wolfe.

White Wyandottes at New York

To the fancier who has never visited the Madison Square Garden Show, words fail to give him any idea of the quality of the birds which is to be found there. In the White Wyandotte class especially is this true. While there were not quite as many on exhibition this year as last, however, each shows a marked improvement in the quality. After taking out the five winners in each class there were still fifteen or twenty of real merit worthy of place. As an example, take the pullet class. Last year when a pullet was sold for $100.00 many of the breeders considered it a top price; this year a pullet which had cost her owner $150.00, failed to get a place.

The cock birds were a grand lot. The three first birds were strictly high-class specimens, the third losing to the other two on color, both of which were as white as snow. The fourth prize cock was not so good in leg color. The fifth cock was just a trifle long in back, fairly good color and comb was not so good. Other cock birds very worthy of mention were numbers 850, slightly off in color; 860, fairly good color, back shape not good; 862, which also fell down on color; 866, bad in ear lobes, and 879, good in shape and medium good in color.

Fifty-one hens were lined up. The first was an easy winner of good shape and fine color. Second and third were not as good in color. Fourth hen was good in shape, color medium and slightly off in leg color. Fifth hen was well deserving of a place. Other good hens were numbers 897 and 903, both of which were poor in leg color; 915 stood right close up to the winners; 919 was a little off in comb and color only fairly good; 920 and 931 were also good enough to win, but had to take a back seat in such a hot class.

Seventy-one cockerels were entered. The first was in the pink of condition and perfectly trained, although he had a tendency to drop his tail at times. The second bird while not as blocky as we like to see a Wyandotte was perfect in all color sections. Third was not quite as good in color. Fourth was about the same, and fifth cockerel, while very good in color, lost to the others on shape. Other cockerels worthy of mention were numbers 956, a good shaped bird; 979, only fair in color; 996; very good in color and 1006.

Pullets were the largest class, there being seventy-three. First and second were of the same type, very good in color, but slightly Cochin in shape. Third was not so good in color. Fourth and fifth were very nice types. Others very worthy were numbers 1017, a grand pullet with a bad tendency to hold her tail to one side; 1012 1020, 1027, were all good ones, slightly off in color; 1044, 1045 and 1049, all three very choice pullets as were 1065, 1066 and 1067, the worst feature of 1067 being her ear lobes.

Pens were very fine. The first pen had a grand male bird but his tail was not out as nice as it could have been. The four hens in this pen were an even, well-shaped lot.

The male in second pen stood a little high on legs and the females were all a little light in eye color. In the third pen the cock was not as well shaped and one hen had a poor eye. The fourth pen had four good hens, and the cockerel was good, but hardly ripe enough to show. The hens in the fifth pen were nice ones, the male bird good shape, but only fair in color. Other good pens were numbers 3486, 3496, 3497 and 3503.—Ross Hallock.

WHITE WYANDOTTE

The Everlasting Red

EDITOR DREVENSTEDT:

Your "tale of the Reds," as set out in the last issue of The Feather, quite takes my breath away. Perhaps you will be good enough to furnish me more specific information as to my election as secretary of the new Single Comb Club and my appointment to the editorship of the "Red Breeders' Bulletin," since I was wholly ignorant, until I read your statement, that these honors had been thrust upon me. I have read with much interest the propositions put into print by the wide awake men who have apparently started out to do the Single Combs justice, but if I have been elected secretary of the Single Comb Club that is one of the strangest elections on record, since I would not have supposed I was qualified for the office and certainly never was informed by any person that my name had been considered in that connection. And respecting the club paper I must say that I have not yet received notice of my selection as editor, and it strikes me as quite remarkable, indeed a mark of great esteem, that a man should be selected for this position without his knowledge and without any negotiations whatever.

Seriously, Brother, you have been misled, by whom or for what purpose, I do not know, but I think that you can do little less, in the present state of things, than to give the name of your informant. I would say, also, and you will know some day how truly I speak, that this is one of the mildest and least regrettable of the injustices that have been done to me and the men who have fought for better conditions for the Reds.

Yours sincerely,

F. D. BAERMAN.

Dunellen, N. J., January 7, 1906.

BROWN'S BUDGET

The Budget this week is packed with New York Show echoes. Nothing ever like it has been seen before. It was Barred Rock Avenue this time. No alley. Not much. Too much quality and too much style. It was the great four hundred of poultry society in Madison Square.

When there is a conglomeration of Thompson, Gardner and Dunning, Wells, Hawkins, Bright, Sites, Bradley, Latham and others, "there's somthin' doin' " in Barred Rocks. And it was true. It was a veritable battle of the Giants. After the reckoning there was still plenty of quality left, the winners didn't have it all.

White Rocks were a snow drift dream, and the "beautiful snow" never was half as deserving of a poem as the magnificent Rocks. According to the writer's judgment the finest White Rock cock was in a display pen. But one must handle all of them as judge to be sure.

Talking about Buffs, did you ever expect to see them rival in even true colored buff, the Cochins? They did at the New York Show. Clean, clear buff tails, perfect wings, and birds with color the same throughout were conspicuous in both males and females. It was the same in Buff Leghorns.

Secretary Crawford was minus his mustache, but his strict discipline wasn't shaved off any. Let it grow again, Brother Crawford. Without it you too much like a really Tammany politician.

Speaking of face adornment we noticed "Ed" Thompson was cultivating whiskers a la Burnside, sort o' ringlets on the side, as it were. When they "round out" a little more Ed will look like a Congressman, an oratorical one, too.

The Hon. James Forsythe, fresh and blooming as a May picked daisy from the meadow, and bubbling with good nature, was on hand. He said Capt. Griffin and the writer were dieting on the elixir of youth. "Jimmy" won't need any as long as he finds so much for his heart and hands to do. Hearts never grow old.

Charles L. Seely, of White Crested Black Polish fame, was on hand after an absence of several years. He was looking as fine as his birds and that is saying considerable.

Deacon Sparks lingered in the vicinity of the White Wyandotte aggregation with an Ivory White interest. If "a man had a dollar" he thought he should buy Ivory soap and put his birds in show condition. Many had already done so.

Hon. David A. Nichols, with real senatorial sedateness, went through his classes with his usual characteristic carefulness. He needs no coaching when he judges the miniature Asiatics.

The onliest Fren Crangle adjusted his speckled jockey cap and assumed his winning smile when he tackled the White Rocks. He was in his glory and had some great work to do and he did it well, too.

Geo. Purdue is yet loyal to his first love, Light Brahmas. He would rather go without meals if he can judge Brahmas. Can he judge them? Well if a good one escapes him it would be a miracle. No kick is coming when Geo. umpires.

Eugene Sites looks well in poultry judge toga. He thinks the West is a great country, but Madison Square made him conclude that the Eastern poultrymen were as great hustlers as the Westerners. Gene is a live, loyal member of the A. P. A.

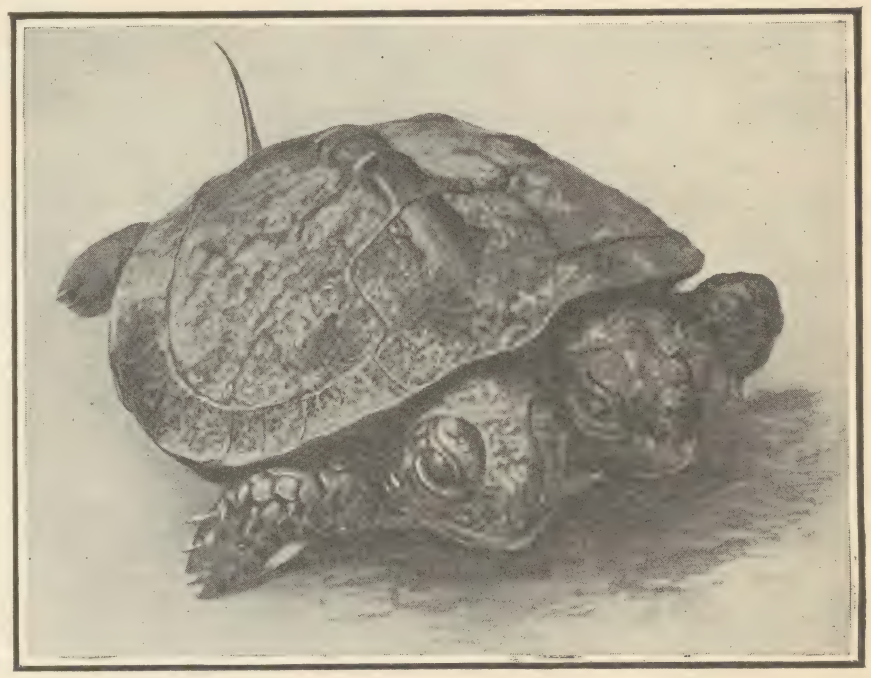
F. D. Baerman backed up his "Red" opinion with a large exhibit of splendid birds. The Rose Comb Rhode Islands made up a marvelously fine class, and impressed many a doubting Thomas very favorably.

Dr. J. S. Wolfe had a display of Silver Spangled Hamburgs. No acrobat ever did bareback stunts in the circus arena bedecked with spangles as uniform and perfect. There should be renewed interest in this beautiful breed and such exhibits will surely create it.

August Arnold is sure he has discovered another Columbia. He started another new worry wrinkle in his August brow before the Columbians were judged. but it was not necessary for his pens were on Easy street all the time.

Mr. Geo. W. Mitchell, as usual walked away with all the awards on Partridge Cochins. He always sends "the goods" to do it. Mr. Mitchell thinks the Partridge Wyandottes are making great headway.

The poultry food and appliances display, down the two long sides of the Garden and the midway booths of the poultry press seemed to especially fit in to complete the decoration or balance up things. Both these displays gave further evidence of the rapid strides the great poultry industry is making. Chapter second will be Boston.



Quite a large number of the Carolina or wood ducks are grown in several parts of the country, but so far we have never learned of any one having grown any Mandarin ducks in this country. If anyone has done so, we would like to have an account of his experience.

If the Canada goose and gander are permitted to select their own mates, they are constant to each other. They can, however, be successfully cross-mated with others, and from this cross-mating are raised the mongrel geese—the very best of all for market purposes.

A Double Headed Tortoise

That Nature is not without a latent sense of humor is often demonstrated by the strange abnormal creatures and freak growths she produces, and rarely does a week pass by that some one of the many illustrated publications does not contain a photograph of a curiosity of this character. Accordingly, this issue of the Scientific American adds one more to the list of oddities in the accompanying engraving of a two-headed box tortoise, the property of Mr. E. S. Schmid, a taxidermist of Washington.

The turtle, which is of a common and well known variety, and whose scientific name is Terrapene Carolina, was found in Fairfax county, Virginia, near Mount Vernon, and with the exception of its superfluity of heads appears to differ little from the ordinary representatives of its kind. The truth of this, however, could only be ascertained at the cost, we fear, of the creature's life, for its armor-like shell would make an investigation of its internal economy hazardous if not impossible. The animal appears to be about four months old, and measures some two by one and three-quarters inches, the shell being possibly a trifle larger than would ordinarily be the case. The two heads are nearly of the same size, and as far as can be seen are perfect in all respects. Its other visible members do not exceed the usual number, and it is probably not incorrect to conclude that the multiplicity is confined to the heads. These do not feed together, but do so separately and alternately, and appear, furthermore, to be otherwise independent. The photograph clearly shows the disposition and the perfect state of both the heads. The apparent protuberances on the lower portions of these are merely grains of sand from the bottom of its cage which have adhered to the mouths.—Scientific American.

"My ad in The Fancier last winter did me unexpected good, bringing fine results. While I do not anticipate similar luck I shall be satisfied, as last January I sold over one hundred birds to portions of the United States which are entirely too remote to be reached without advertising. Thanking you for past favors."—M. C. Guildin.

How to Obtain Eggs in Winter

In telling how to obtain eggs in winter, Mr. A. G. Gilbert, of the Ottawa Experiment Station, says: "Besides having a good egg-producing breed, well housed and well cared for, a proper ration must be used." For the interest of our readers, we give in full the ration as prescribed by Prof. Gilbert:

Having a fairly comfortable house, hens of proper age and over their moult by the end of October, the following rations, such as used by ourselves and farmers, will be found effective in the production of eggs in winter. I give first the rations fed to our poultry during the past winter, which are as follows:

To 110 hens, one to two years old:

In the morning, 8 pounds of wheat.

Noon, 6 pounds ground grain (measured dry), made into mash.

Afternoon, 8 pounds wheat or buckwheat.

Three times per week, 8 pounds of cut bone were given in lieu of the mash. Mangels, pure water, grit and ground oyster shells were in abundant supply. Sometimes steamed lawn clippings took the place of the mangels. The ground grains for the mash were 2 pounds of coarse-ground oats, 2 pounds of corn meal, 1 pound of shorts.

The reason for feeding the whole grain in the morning was that scattered in litter on the floors of the pens, the hens started at once to scratch for it, and exercise was induced. The whole grain in the afternoon was calculated to send the fowls to roost with their crops fairly well filled. This grain was also scattered in the litter on the floor.

To 150 pullets of different ages:

For morning rations, 10 pounds of grain, principally wheat.

Noon, 10 pounds of mash.

Afternoon, 10 pounds of grain.

Three times per week, 10 pounds of cut green bone, in place of the mash,

The ground grains composing the mash were: Corn meal, 5 pounds; coarsely-ground oats, 3 pounds; shorts, 2 pounds. The essentials, such as roots, grit, oyster shells and pure water, were in regular supply. The reason for adopting the above method of feeding the pullets was the same as in the case of the hens.

Calculating at least full values, the price of the rations is placed as follow

Rations for 110 l ens four times a week:
Sixteen pounds wheat at 75 cents per bushel.. .....20c.
Five pounds ground grain for mash.. ....06c.
Lime, grit, mangles, etc.....03c.

Total .. ..29c.

Other days:
Sixteen pounds of wheat.....20c.
Eight pounds cut green bone at 1 cent .. ..08c.
Lime, grit and mangels.....03c.

Total .. ..31c.

Rations for 150 pullets four times per week:
Twenty pounds wheat.....25c.
Ten pounds mash .....12c.
Lime, grit, mangels, etc.....03c.

Total .. ..40c.

When the mash was not fed it was replaced by ten pounds cut green bone at one cent per pound.

The output of eggs during December, January and February varied from four to five dozen per day. Sometimes in the latter part of January, or beginning with February, six dozen per day. These eggs were sold at 40 cents per dozen, and we could not supply nearly enough, giving a revenue per day of from $1.60 to $2 and $2.40, at a cost of 65 to 70 cents, leaving a fair margin of profit, during the months mentioned, from eggs alone. And it is to be remembered that the cost of rations included the hens which were non-productive during the winter season.

Points on Incubators

Dr. Richard M. Wood has prepared a bulletin for the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., on "Incubation and Incubators." The summary of his instructions is given below, and the bulletin may be had on application to the department:

Study your incubator.

Acquaint yourself with all its parts.

Read the manufacturer's directions for setting it up.

Set it up carefully and according to instructions.

Never try to run an incubator in a drafty place, nor near a stove, nor where the sun shines upon it.

Set fertile eggs only. Waste no effort upon those that are doubtful.

Learn how to trim and clean a lamp.

Keep the lamps full and the wick and tube clean.

Avoid smoke.

See that the eggs are clean and dry before setting them.

Balance all eggs, large end up, a few hours before placing them in the tray.

Do not overfill the tray.

Turn every egg the third day.

Cool the eggs every morning.

Be sure your hands are clean when handling eggs.

Test all eggs by the seventh day.

Test again by the eleventh day.

Test again by the fifteenth day.

If the air space is too large, supply moisture; if too small, put a saucer of dry lime in the room and run without moisture a day or two.

Do not expect to learn all about the air cell the first hatch. You will learn that later.

Do not disturb the eggs after the evening of the eighteenth day.

Have a regular hour for incubator work.

Do not tinker too much with the regulator.

KEEPING PIGEONS

Tobacco stems are recommended to be used for making nests for pigeons. Just why tobacco stems are recommended we can not understand. We know that they will not keep away insect vermin. The smell of tobacco has no influence at all upon the lice that infests the nests of pigeons. Nothing but dust or oil will destroy them; fumes of tobacco stems will not. Cleanliness, nests made of hay or straw, and plenty of water for the pigeons to bathe in is the only way to keep the insect vermin from the pigeon lofts and nests. Nothing is so attractive to the pigeons as a bath, and the chance to bask in the sunlight afterwards.

Do not use squab breeders less than a year old. Young pigeons six or seven months old do not make profitable producers of market squabs. Pigeons from one to six years old are the best producers. It is quite as difficult to tell the age of a pigeon, as it is to be absolutely certain of its sex. It is much easier to tell that a pigeon is under a year old than to prove that it is six or seven years old. Always select large, rugged females for squab breeders.

The ways of cooking squabs are many. A pigeon pie can be made the same as a chicken pot-pie; baked in a baking pan three or four inches deep, with a crust over it. When this is done, leave the shanks and feet on the young pigeons, and let them stick through the top crust as it makes an attractive addition to the dish. They may be broiled, smothered or baked the same as quail or other game. Some prefer a squab to a quail.

Above all things have your squab breeders as tame as possible. Do not frighten or disturb them so as to cause them to fly quickly from the nest. When frightened, they may dash out of the nest and break the eggs or scrape the young from the nest and kill them. Always go quietly into the loft and announce your coming through cooing or whistling to the birds. Properly handled pigeons will permit the attendant to place his hand upon them while sitting on the eggs, showing but very little resistance.

The best way to start a loft of squab breeders is to begin with ten or a dozen well selected pairs. Save all the young hatched from them the first year, and cross-mate them, the males from one pair with the females from another pair. Dispose of all the undersized specimens thus produced, and build up the quality of your breeding stock through continually selecting of the best. In this way you learn to manage your loft properly, you can secure your squab breeders of the best quality at the lowest possible cost, and by the time you are able to handle fifty or a hundred pairs you will have them of your own breeding, and can begin to raise and sell at a profit. People with but little experience, seldom, if ever, succeed in squab-growing. The experience comes first, the profit follows.

Squabs that do not exceed eight pounds to the pair rarely sell at a profit in the market. In our January issue of the "Feather," we published an article on the Bordeaux pigeon—the great squab-growing variety of the continent. More on this subject will be published in the near future. We endeavor to furnish the readers of the "Feather" and the "American Fancier" with the best possible information to be gained in squab growing. Those who follow our instructions can scarcely go astray.

PIGMY POUTER

New grain, impure grain, musty grain, and poor grains of any kind should never be fed to the breeding stock during the breeding season. The better the wheat, the better the cracked corn, the better the peas and other grains that are fed, the larger and more profitable will be the squabs. Cheap grain, carelessly fed to undersized pigeons, guarantees disaster. Even if fed to the very best producers, but little success will come from its use.

It will soon be time for all the squab breeders to be at work. Select all the best females that you possess, size, strength, vigor and working qualities considered, mate them to the very best males in the loft. After the stock of superiority is exhausted, sell all the balance to the market. Do not keep them nor sell them to others for breeders. Do as you would be done by. Help to cull the market of poor, unprofitable breeding stock through your example of keeping only the best.

When pigeons become very old the nostrils become wrinkled, the eyes seem sunken in the head, eyelids become thick and rough, shanks rough and lighter in color. These appearances cannot be mistaken. A young active pigeon always stands alert during the breeding season, holds up his head, the eyes are bright and clear, and the appearance is that of industry and push.

We have known kittens to be brought up in a pigeon loft that would keep the loft clear of rats and mice and never disturb the pigeons or their young. Cats must be trained to this learn the art of killing the young squabs, they relish them so much that they would clean out a loft in a few days. They must be trained to the business and constantly watched until they can be trusted.

We wish to emphasize our own former statement. Entirely too much is usually expected from the first purchase. When a novice takes hold of pigeon growing, he must expect but very little the first season from his breeding stock. Then, again, we do not exert our own ability toward helping themselves out of difficulties. Even a pair of canary birds can not be managed in a cage without experience. Every kind of business must be thoroughly understood before any one can succeed in it. Learn to understand what you are about before you blame others for their short-comings, or complain for lack of success.

Utility vs Standard Bred

There is an unusual inclination among those who class themselves as utility poultrymen to claim that the American Standard of Perfection is against the best intersts of utility production in poultry. This is a distinction without reason, cause or foundation. If they would stop to consider all the facts pertaining thereto, they would cease to make such claims.

We have not seen recorded in the last fifteen years a single instance where there has been held a contest for pens, or pairs, of poultry to see which would produce the greatest egg yield in which the ascendency has been gained by any other than some one of our standard-bred breeds or varieties. On the other hand every egg-laying contest that has attracted national or international attention has been won by some one of our standard breeds or varieties. When I say "ours," I refer to what are known as the American and Mediterranean breeds of poultry, all of which originated with us.

When it is so apparent that all of the best egg-producers are standard-bred fowls, is it not very much out of place for any one to contend that the Standard is antagonistic to profitable results in utility poultry?

In a proposition sent out for the organization of a poultry society in Connecticut, to be known as a state organization and conducted for the interest of the fanciers throughout the state, the circulars set forth the fact that "utility interests will be largely considered." Every one knows that if it were not for the utility or market interests, no kind of standard-bred poultry, cattle, sheep or hogs of any kind would be profitable. It is the fact that this high-quality stock is most profitable along the lines of market purposes that builds up the standard-bred interest of high-class stock. Of course, we understand thoroughly that these statements are to attract the interest of farmers, and to induce them to believe that their special interest as poultry growers is to have marked attention. At the same time the statement is misleading, and gives to the farmer the opportunity for believing that this high-toned exhibition stock is a failure, and that if he wishes to succeed he must stick to his old barnyard fowls. We know full well that it is not the intention of those who advocate the utility side; we know that often more harm is done than benefit derived. When you call attention to the utility side of the business, be as careful in the presentation of it as are the breeders of standard-bred poultry in presenting the real value of their products.

The greatest exhibition fowl in the world, we presume, is the Barred Plymouth Rock. More time, money, labor and experience has been expended in producing these of the higher quality than in any other breed. They have sold for the highest prices and their exhibition value advances yearly. At the same time there are more of them used upon the farm, more of their carcasses handled as market poultry and more of their eggs sold throughout the land than of any other kind, and every one interested in the business of handling them never hesitates to purchase them. If this is the true fact and situation why is it necessary to continue the useless presentation of the utility proposition directly against the standard-bred principle?

In the production of beef cattle the highest prices are paid for the descendants of the prize-winners; the same is true in rearing work horses, sheep for wool, market hogs and dairy cows. When this well-known fact is so apparent, and it is also a well-established fact that standard-bred poultry and their product will win every time in every utility competition, why not look the matter square in the face and advocate in every domicile of the world the fostering of these breeds and varieties for profitable returns.

House Cleaning Time

Yes, clean your house and clean your shed,
And clean your barn in every part;
But brush the cobwebs from your head,
And sweep the snow-banks from your heart.

Yes, when spring cleaning comes around,
Bring forth the duster and the broom;
But rake your foggy notions down,
And sweep your dusty soul of gloom.

Sweep old ideas with the dust,
And dress your soul in newer style;
Scrape from your mind its worn-out crust,
And dump it in the rubbish pile.

NEW VARIETIES

The creating of new varieties has fascination about it that is most enticing to fanciers fond of something new to study and experiment with. When the Partridge and Silver-penciled Wyandottes were brought into the arena of Standard existence there was an unusual amount of enthusiasm displayed, numerous illustrations were made and articles published in their interst. There seemed to be an overflow of eloquence in their favor. Of late this seems to have lagged considerably. As a warning to those interested in these varieties we will quote from the circulars sent out to solicit subscriptions to the special prize award list for the coming winter shows. The statement is as follows: "Join with us to prevent the possibility of the Barred Plymouth Rock being lost sight of for want of enthusiasm and publicity." No breed or variety has ever had equal preference with the Barred Plymouth Rock. They were started through an accident, fostered for gain, cultivated for excellence and ever kept in mind throughout the world through illustrations and the press. For years go wherever you might or turn where you may there was to be seen well-executed ilustrations of Barred Plymouth Rocks.

The Wyandotte family has been encouraged along the same lines. Each new variety is well-separated in this way at its conception, but as stated above the Partridge and the Silver-penciled Wyandottes have not had the publicity they deserve for the last two years.

Two new aspirants are in the field, the Silver-penciled Plymouth Rock and the Columbian Wyandotte. Specimens of both of these, of surprising quality, were shown at Hagerstown. There is an opportunity to gain renown for these through publicity. They may fall by the wayside for lack of energy to push them. They may become as popular as the Barred Plymouth Rock or may soon be forgotten like others that have been neglected.

The advent of the Orpington came like a rocket, ascended into the skies and burst over us like a shower of gold. This signal for publicity was taken up and passed all along the line, until to-day there is scarcely a man, woman or child in America the least interested in poultry but what have heard the name Orpington. If the American fanciers interested in these new breeds or varieties would take lessons from the push of those who advanced the Orpington there would be no danger whatever of their particular fancy ever being lost sight of.

The Rhode Island Reds came like a whirlwind into the Boston Show. They were taken hold of by some of the best New England fanciers. The line of these that have been repeatedly shown at Boston speak loudly in favor of their existing qualities. There were all three varieties, distinguished only by their combs—single, rose and pea combs. These became most popular from Maine to California and from Canada to the Gulf. A friend who visited through the agricultural districts of the South last winter tells us that Rhode Island Reds are more plentiful and more highly considered in some localities of Florida than are the Plymouth Rocks. To the fanciers of New England must be credited whatever of exhibition quality these breeds possess. And to their consideration should be willingly conceded the right of making the Standard and of presenting the Standard demands of quality.

The most unfortunate thing that has ever happened to any new variety was to the American Red-Rose-combed Rhode Island Red muddle through the American Poultry Association, and the most gracious thing possible, the most beneficial move possible, the one move that would reflect more credit upon the mover and do more good for the variety than any other thing, would be for the champion of the American Red to come forward and demand that all Rose-combed Rhode Island Reds, both single and rose-combed, should be judged and bred under the new Standard for Rhode Island Reds as published in the new illustrated Standard, and move the unanimous adoption of the name Rose-combed Rhode Island Red for them, and the placing of same in the Standard as a variety under the Rhode Island Red description.

The Buckeye was admitted as a separate breed at Minneapolis. We have studied the breed and compared them with the published description in the Standard of Perfection. We can not recognize any reason under the sun why they should have been accepted as a separate breed or variety. If they are of any breed or variety they belong to the Pea-combed Rhode Island Reds. They should be classed with them and not be permitted to sail under the flag of individuality of breed within the published pages of the Standard of Perfection. Their admission to the Standard seems to have been a tribute to the personal feelings of the originator rather than because they were a separate breed or variety unto themselves. We believe, however, that this is a proposition that will settle itself like the Pea-combed Plymouth Rocks and the Pea-combed Partridge Cochins and some other breeds and varieties; they will gradually accommodate themselves to the demands of the general public, and either take a position higher up than at present, or become pleasant pastime of a few.

One of the originators of a very fine variety of fowls not yet admitted to the Standard is very adverse to Standard recognition for the fowls. He claims that their qualities will sooner or later demand for them admission to the Standard; that all now raised have more than ready sale. The demand increases day by day. He makes the claim that they should be allowed to stand upon their own merits without being aided by the Standard. At the same time he and his associates go bravely on pushing to the front to gain public admiration for these beautiful varieties, which we believe are destined to become, in the near future, one of the most popular of exhibition fowls.

The cultivation of new breeds and varieties should be commended on all sides. Those interested in them should labor constantly to improve the quality of the new aspirants for public honor, and as fast as they gain position through their quality they should be made popular through illustrations and articles throughout the entire poultry and agricultural press, but this should never be done until the quality is assured; more harm is done through inducing people to take up with something new that lacks the quality than can be done in any other way to the poultry fancy.

Special Notice

During the week of the New York Show a number of the New York fanciers approached the owners of the "American Fancier" with the request that a transfer of publication be made of this long-time fanciers' weekly paper to the Metropolis of America, and that it become a part of the great fanciers' association of America and be controlled by and for the interest of the true fanciers of standard-bred poultry.

The owner of the paper agreed to this upon the stipulation that a public subscription of the stock to be permitted; that the capitalization be $10,000, the shares of stock $10 each, and as many fanciers as seemed disposed to do so might have the opportunity to subscribe for one more shares of the stock, and then become personally connected with the welfare of the paper.

A certificate of incorporation will be obtained through Mr. H. M. Carpenter, of Ossining, New York, a banker, lawyer, and publisher of considerable prominence in that city and a subscriber to the stock of the company. The office of publication will be in New York City in charge of M. R. L. Hutchings. Mr. Geo. E. Howard, Mr. J. H. Drevenstedt, Mr. R. L. Hutchings,, Mr. T. F. McGrew, Mr. H. M. Carpenter and others are the original movers in the organization. Books have been opened for subscriptions at the office of Mr. George E. Howard, 714 12th street, Northwest, Washington, D. C., where all interested in having one or more shares of stock will write and send checks in payment for the amount they may wish to subscribe. $5,000 of the $10,000 capitalization will be placed in the treasury, for the benefit of improving and pushing forward the best interests of the American Fancier. Every reader of this paper is invited to become part of the American Fancier Publishing Company.

Go Slow, Brother!

Michael K. Boyer writes as follows in Farm Journal: "Peter Tumbledown thinks that feed hoppers are just the thing, as he can lie in bed these cold mornings while the hens are helping themselves to corn."

Look out, M. K., things are changing. The Feather tells of one Tillinghast, who is getting rich from hopper-feeding hens on screenings, and it is true at that.

The following is from the same publication and might be added to the Poultryman's Bible or pasted up for daily reading:

"Some folks allow the hen manure and litter on the floors of the houses to get so deep that the birds can not get the grain which is scattered there. Who does not know that this is wasteful in the extreme? Hens like litter, but not filthiness. E. L. V.

"Appearance goes a long way toward getting a top price for your dressed poultry. It requires a little more work to finish up a carcass neatly, press it into shape, and tie with a neat string or narrow ribbon, but it is a great advertisement, and may mean an advance on the market price. F. L. B. R."

"Received your notice that my subscrpton has run out to The American Fancier. I would not like to do without it. Enclosed please find $1 for one year's subscription."—Bert Sadler, St. Louis, Mo.

Martin's White Wyandottes won more prizes than any other exhibitor. First and Third Cockerel, First and Third Pullet, Second Cock, Second Hen and Second Pen. This was a remarkable win, owing to the fact that previous to this show they had been cooped nearly two weeks at the Toronto Show, and thus were not in as good condition as the birds they competed with.

Superb Winning Pigmy Pouters

At the Great Madison Square Show.

HERE'S A RECORD TO BE PROUD of. At the Great New York Show, held in Madison Square Garden, January 2–6, 1906, on 24 entries, we won 24 premiums as follows: Eleven firsts, 10 seconds, and 3 thirds. It is evident that this GREAT RECORD is a world breaker. It is a case of where blood will tell. We have all blue-blooded birds in our Lofts.

At the last Great Hagerstown Show, the Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts, on twenty-four entries, were awarded 10 firsts (out of 3 possible 11 firsts, 5 seconds, 2 thirds, a fourths, 3 fifths, and special for best bird in show.

All Bred in Line from the Finest American and English Winners.

We have a few fine Breeders for sale, which should breed you winners of "the blue" in any show. This opportunity won't last forever as our stock for sale is limited, the first come, first served.

The quality is here. The opportunity for such purchase does not often present itself.

Cook's Game Bantams

are still adding to their unprecedented show record of last season. At Providence my Black Reds not only took every first, but won three gold specials for best Game Bantam cock, best cockerel, and best pullet. At Woonsocket, in very strong competition, took three firsts, and gold special for best Game Bantam in show. And better still, these winners of gold specials were all bred in Slatersville. Also have a nice lot of Pyles and Birchens that are not far behind. Look up the awards at Providence and Woonsocket and see. May show elsewhere later. Shall have a few at Boston, all but one bred by myself. Watch the Awards.

STOCK FOR SALE.

A SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

DON'T KILL A HEN WITH MONEY IN HER LIKE THIS

WE TEACH YOU HOW TO PICK OUT YOUR LAYING HENS

Don't kill the laying hen—the hen with money in her.
Learn our secret.
Know how to select the laying hen from the non-laying hen. This profitable information will teach you—
1st. Not to kill the hen that is laying.
2nd. To pick out the non-laying hen.
3rd. To know how far advanced the hen is toward the laying point.
4th. To avoid wintering hens that are not likely to be good winter layers.
5th. To know how to select the hen having strong laying powers for breeding purposes.
6th. To know the hen that has entirely lost her power of egg production.
7th. To know how to sort out the hens in summer or fall that have ceased laying for the year.
8th. To know the hen that has become weakened in her laying powers.
9th. To know how to buy hens in the early winter that will make good winter layers, and dispose of them at a large profit after receiving their crop of eggs.

ILLINOIS STATE FAIR, SEPT. 30 TO OCT. 7, 1905.

The following are a few of the gentlemen who have taken our system. Read the names. You will find that every man stands high in the poultry fraternity:

Springfield, Ill., October 3, 1905.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that T. F. Potter has demonstrated to our entire satisfaction the Potter System of selecting the laying hen from the non-laying hen, and we are convinced that his system is absolutely certain.

Young's Strain S. C. W. Leghorns

Have No Other Breeds

My strain, again for the 5th consecutive year, shows its superiority by winning more prizes at Madison Square Garden, New York, than all others combined, including cup, medal and four specials. Two weeks later I showed at Boston against the most prominent breeders of the East, winning nine prizes on nine entries over birds that won 1st at St. Louis.

I showed 2 Cocks, won 1st, 2d; I showed 2 Hens, won 1st, 2d
I showed 2 Ckrls., won 1st, 2d; I showed 2 P'l'ts, won 1st, 2d
I showed 1 Breeding Pen, won 1st

Also four specials. This record has never been equaled by any other breed or breeder in America. Stock for sale at all times. One hundred of this year's breeding hens for sale to make room for young stock. Address 44

PROFITABLE POULTRY

You can raise it and make money with our free 64-page poultry guide. It tells how to avoid mistakes and failures; tells what to breed for biggest profit; how to feed, rear and hatch successfully. Tells about Berry's "BIDDY" incubators and brooders, the kind that "run" themselves—the kind to buy. Contains plans for brooder, colony and poultry houses, yards, poultry farms. Also cuts of our pure-bred poultry with prices of birds and eggs for hatching. It's a book that will be appreciated by every one. A postal brings it to your home. MODEL INCUBATORS and BROODERS

WHY NOT BUY THE GENUINE?

The Model has proven so successful the past two seasons that other manufacturers have taken it as a Model as the name implies, have copied it as far as they could, and are now proclaiming wonderful improvements on their old type of machines. This is flattering to the Model, but hardly so to the public. Such methods may fool some, but can hardly fool many. What you want is the best—not a weak imitation. The heat, ventilation, and regulation in the Model are balanced up by a master hand. It does the work automatically and gives the results. Send for complete catalogue.

MY NEW BOOK

"Eggs, Broilers and Roasters,"

An Easy Lesson in Practical Poultry Culture, A Book of Peculiar Value to all Poultrymen.

It describes the profitable combinations of egg, broiler and roaster farms. It gives the prices paid for eggs and poultry week by week for the past three years. It tells how and when a hatch taken off each week in the year could be most profitably marketed. It shows how you can make $2.00 on a large winter roaster. It tells what profits can be made with each of the popular breeds, and the costs of production. This valuable work mailed FREE upon request. I have helped thousands to make money with poultry. My Model Incubators and Brooders are used on the money-making farms. It is my business to teach those who use them to do so profitably. Whether your needs are small or large, I will furnish, without charge, estimates and plans for a complete equipment that will insure success without your spending a dollar uselessly.

Editorial Gossip

The next issue of the American Fancier will be dated February 3. There will not be any issue January 27, as that is the week for the issue of the Feather. The list of awards of the Boston Show will be published in February 3rd issue of the American Fancier.

The Boston Show is the largest ever held by that Association, except the record breaker of 1902. It is a very evenly balanced show. Classes that were weak at New York, such as the Dorkings, and other not so popular breeds, have a stronger reputation than at New York. The total entry at New York, 6,091; the total entry at Boston 6,000.

The usual banquet was held Tuesday night at Copley Square Hotel, to which beautifully illuminated invitations were issued in advance. This gathering always has a most soothing influence over the exhibitors at the close of the day, when the awards have been made.

Secretary Roberts is to be congratulated on his careful and successful management of the Boston Show; always having been actively connected with the Show fitted him for this work. He is now recognized as a successful manager of a large show.

In our issue of January 6, we recorded the death of Mr. Harrison Weir, the news having come from London under the date of January 4. Since that time we have learned of the death of Mr. Lewis Wright. Thus have departed the two greatest writers of the world on poultry matters. We shall have more to say about this in the February 1st issue of the "Feather."

Mr. Charles A. Cyphers has issued two books of remarkable interest: one, "Poultry Feeding For Profit"; the other, just from the press, "Eggs, Broilers and Roasters." These two books are of vital importance to every grower of poultry. Such books are often sold at fifty cents apiece, but Mr. Cyphers will furnish one or both of these to any of the readers of the American Fancier, who will write to him, requesting him to do so. These books go carefully into the subject of poultry culture in a new and helpful manner. They are full of statistical reports, scientific investigations and hard-gained experience.

The special course in poultry culture will soon be under way at the New York Agricultural College at Ithica, the Rhode Island Agricultural College at Kingston, and the Connecticut, at Storrs, Connecticut. All interested in these should write at once to the college of their choice for more complete information and terms for the course.

Bulletin No. 234, issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, treats fully upon guinea fowls and their use as food. This Bulletin will be sent free to any who may be interested enough in these fowls to ask that the same be sent them.

Both Boston and Cincinnati are ablaze with the poultry fraternity this week. The great Boston Show the greatest in its history, attracts New England. The Cincinnati Show, and the meeting of the American Poultry Association at Cincinnati, January 18th, quickens the heart of all breeders throughout the country who hope that benefit may come to the interest through this meeting, while trembling with fear lest something may be done that will not reflect credit upon the great poultry interest of the world. Let us hope for the best, and await the report sent from the meeting to be published.

We glean the following from an English Exchange, which comes from the pen of Mr. John Hope, a prominent English fancier:

"Paraffin, if used with care and discretion, is a friend of the poultryman. At this time of the year it is especially valuable. Nothing interferes with the growth of chickens or the output of eggs so much as the presence of vermin. Paraffin will effectually banish these pests from your houses and stock. Paint your perches, sockets, nest-boxes, and any crevices about where the fowls roost, with paraffin; it will penetrate every crack or crevice and destroy all vermin in its course. No lime-wash for coop, brooder, or fowl-house is complete without it. Added to tar, it makes it easier to work, dries quickly, and leaves a brilliant black polish. Made into a paste with sulphur, it will cure scaly leg. As a mouth-wash in roup, it is by no means to be despised. Mixed with three times its bulk of sweet oil, it will destroy lice on chicks. Sprinkled on the dust-bath, it is also good for destroying lice on hens. It provides warm morning food for hundreds of fowls by being used in food cookers. It helps to hatch and rear thousands of chickens annually by being used for incubators and brooders. With the help of paraffin you will banish lice and vermin from your stock, your hens will lay better, your chickens will thrive, and you will reap more pleasure and profit from your fowls. Paraffin, if used aright, is without doubt a friend of the poultry keeper."

In building your winter poultry houses, or rather, in arranging for the winter care of poultry, remember that nothing is so destructive as roup, canker and other kindred diseases, all of which may quickly come if the poultry are kept in damp, unwholesome quarters. Poultry buildings that have not been cleaned for six months or a year have accumulated a world of poison. As soon as the dampness of fall or winter sets in this filth gathers the moisture and pours forth volumes of poison which destroy thousands of poultry every year, the result of careless bad treatment. Dampness to the poultry is worse, if possible than the ravage of yellow fever or small pox in the human race. If the same drastic methods were applied to the poultry houses that are compulsory to the dwelling houses of human beings when cholera or yellow fever is prevalent, there would be but little trouble with ailments of any kind in poultry. All the ailments that poultry possess today have crept in as the result of too close inbreeding and the confining of poultry in unwholesome and unhealthy houses.

During the winter months do not forget that the poultry should be supplied very liberally indeed with green and vegetable food. All the leavings from the table, such as the pealings from all kind of vegetables, tops of celery, beets, turnips and radishes should all be cut up fine, and the vegetables and the green tops thoroughly cooked and used as the base of the warm mash for the poultry. If a pot full of these potato and other peelings with the tops, is thoroughly cooked and mixed into a dry mash of two parts bran, one part corn meal and two parts ground oats, it will make the finest possible ration for the laying hens. If fed to them at noon and allowed to have all they will eat, it will start them to singing and digging in the dry dust when the sun shines, which is an evidence of good health and a determination to produce eggs. Next to this, nothing is better than fine-cut short clover or alfalfa hay. You can not furnish too much of this kind of food. Every person who keeps poultry, that has any garden spot at all, should grow as many mangel wurzel or other kinds of beets and turnips for their poultry as possible. In winter this can be chopped up fine, thoroughly cooked, mashed up and worked into the mash most profitably.

Cattle beets, sugar beets, stock beans and peas can all be turned to good account, if thoroughly cooked and used as a vegetable ration for the poultry. Oh, how they do love a mixture of boiled stock peas and beans that has been brought to a thick mush or mash with bran, middlings and ground oats. All the small broken peas and beans can be made use of in this way, greatly to the benefit of the egg basket. Nothing tends to increase the egg yield more than does a food of this kind.

The same food that would make pullets grow and lay might make the old hens too fat for a profitable egg production. Do not keep the old hens and the young pullets together, if it is possible to avoid it. Separate them and feed them in separate pens. The old hens that are past their second winter will never pay their keep as egg producers in the future. We know that some old hens do well after the second winter. We also realize that you can not always have as many pullets and yearling hens as you would like to keep for your winter supply. We are citing a rule that it as valuable to follow. But it does not follow that no one shall keep any hens after the second winter. If you are looking to make money from your hens as producers of market eggs, the rule is absolute. If you are looking to a better quality of eggs for hatching, the old hens lay the best. When about a year old hens are the best for producing pullets, but they are not the best for producing a profitable winter egg supply.

We are asked, "What is a cull?" The culls of our flocks are the poorest in them. We do not believe there is a flock on earth that has not some tail-enders. The closer you cull the better will be the remainder. The profit comes from the best poultry, not from keeping culls.

Next to dampness in the poultry building comes overcrowding as a destructive element in poultry culture. Do not try to keep too many together. Give them plenty of floor space and roosting room. They will do the best under such treatment.

Mr. Geo. B. Inches, one of the officers of the Boston Poultry Association, purchased the first prize pair of Aylesbury ducks at Madison Square Garden, from Mr. E. H. Morris, of Sparkill, N. Y. The latter was very successful in capturing seven firsts and one second on eight duck entries.

The Columbian Wyandotte Club was formed at the Madison Square Garden, January 3d, with twenty members present, but the charter is open for charter members until March 1, 1906. All who wish to join can do so by sending in their name to the secretary, Mr. Edgar E. McIntosh, Hope Valley, R. I., accompanied by a fee of two dollars and one dollar for annual dues in advance. The club also voted to have the Columbian Wyandottes admitted to the Standard at the Cincinnati meeting of the American Poultry Association held last week. Mr. W. B. Richardson, one of the pioneer breeders of Columbians was elected president of the club. We congratulated the members on their selection of officers, knowing both gentlemen to be fine fanciers who will do all in their power to make the new variety a power among standard-bred fowls of America.

The advancement of the Columbian Wyandotte has been rapid of late. Such shrewd breeders as August D. Arnold and Ed. Graff being the latest to take up the variety. There are many others ready to take them up, once their merits become better known.

Secretary N. B. Lints of the Show to be held at Frankfort, N. Y., writes that entries will close February 3d, and that judging begins on Tuesday noon, February 13. J. H. Drevenstedt and M. S. Gardner will place the ribbons. This is the wind-up Show of the season in the Empire State.

We met the Hon. M. F. Wemple, chief of the Empire Cooping Company at Albany, N. Y., last week, where he was engaged in putting up the coops for the big Show held in that city. He reports business exceedingly good, owners for cooping a number of shows being turned down for lack of time and help, the clashing of dates making it impossible to handle shows in a satisfactory manner, so the refusal to coop some was based on sound business judgment. The demand for Empire coops and other appliances made by this company has also been very great.

The Show held at Albany, N. Y. proved to be a big success and was the finest ever held in the Capital City of the Empire State. With such men as Dr. Hurdis, Ford, Hill, Jacquins, Rockenstyne and others behind the project there can be no such a thing as failure.

The Olean, N. Y. Show closed its third annual, January 13th. It was the largest and best ever held in the city of oil tanks. In fact it was a big surprise to the writer to handle and score so many high-class birds. There were about five hundred in the hall, nicely arranged in Mr. Faber's new coops. The latter possess some novel features that might well be adopted by others in the cooping business. The classification was very good, the light excellent at night and fairly good during the day. The officers are certainly a good lot of fanciers and know how to treat the visiting fanciers and public in the most courteous manner.

The White Wyandottes numbered over one hundred and twenty and proved to be as fine a lot as we ever have seen at a Show of this size this season, in fact they will bear very favorable comparison with the birds at our largest shows. It was a pretty hard fight for the honors and no one had a cinch, the prizes being split up greatly. The rest of the Wyandotte classes were not up to expectation in numbers but the Silver Laced and Silver Penciled varieties had considerable merit.

The Barred Rocks were quite strong with some very good individual specimens in the lot, even if the scores did not soar up in the nineties. The White Rocks were few but excellent, notably first cock and hen. There were a few good Buffs.

Rhode Island Reds were numerous, some very good, others fair and a few utterly lacking in color and type. We had an interesting talk with Mr. Geo. Faber, who has developed into a "Red crank" of the deepest dye. His experiences in the past five years in buying eggs and birds from noted Rhode Island Red breeders would make mighty interesting reading if any public journal had nerve enough to publish them, i. e. the methods of some of the men who are supposed to deal on the square. But the interesting fact was developed that had Mr. Faber adhered to his original strain and not mixed or blended it with others, he would have been better off to-day. It is true he has the original blood and some of the progeny that is worth looking at, handling over and studying. But the other yards and blends seem to have a knack of losing the ancestral type and color. It is just such bad results in hatching Rhode Island Reds from eggs bought of different breeders that discourages the average breeder and fancier. Mr. Faber is made of sterner stuff and has instituted a system of line breeding that will enable him to get a more uniform and satisfactory result. The Rose-combed cock and pullet shown by him, we believe are of the old Crowther blood or strain and certainly had the rich surface color demanded with a beautiful under color. We are beginning to like Rhode Island Reds, after handling so many the past season; the quality is getting to be "way up" and the competition warm enough to keep the judge rubbing his collar.

Black Minorcas were unusually numerous and good at Olean, but the cuts on weights cut the scores down rather low. Some of the exhibitors present think the weights on Minorcas are too high, especially on Whites. Some beautiful specimens of the latter were on exhibition, but were cut from three to four points on weight. We are inclined to think a reduction in the weights would not be amiss, in fact, might prove a benefit to the breed. There was a big bunch of Anconas with some really fine specimens, notably first hen and pullet, both grand in color and mottling.

Leghorns made up a large and lively collection, the Whites leading. The quality of the latter was very much above the average, some of the winning females scoring up to high water mark, first hen and pullet being particulary fine in plumage, comb and shape. Buffs averaged very high in quality. The Browns did not come up to expectations except in a few of the winning males and females. Most of the latter were too dark and shafty in color. The Blacks were good.

The Asiatic Classes were weak in numbers, but the two Light Brahmas and Light Black Leghorns were very good in quality, real top-notchers. Buff and White Orpingtons were first class. The same can be said of the Indian Game. If some of the exhibitors of Bantams would buy a Standard they would save their entry fees. Exhibiting Golden Sebright Bantams with Single-combs and Black Rose-combs with yellow legs is not calculated to help winning a ribbon or money. The first pair of Pekin ducks is as fine a pair as we have seen this season. If the Olean Show keeps on growing as it has in the past year or so, Gov. Higgins who resides in that city, will be asked to build a hall, or permit the State Armory to be used for the next annual exhibition. This reminds us of the fact that the State Armories of Albany, Schenectady,, Auburn and Buffalo are being used for such purposes. So why not the one at Olean?

It is whispered that peace and harmony has been restored between American Red and Rose-Comb Rhode Island warriors. Good, if true.

Cutting for excess weight over Standard weight requirements is causing considerable growling all along the line. But this is one of the beautiful inconsistencies of the theatrical score card system. The score card means well but fails to make good in cases of this kind. It is true that an ideal bird is one having the Standard weight allotted and usually the bird approaching closer to that weight is the best, all other points being equal. With comparison judging no such cuts are likely to occur, on over-fat and heavily-weighted bird being readily seen and placed back, but a really fine symmetrical specimen correct in type that is two pounds over Standard weight will never lose a trick when judged by comparison and, other points being equal, is liable to win over a smaller or lighter specimen. We are inclined to agree with "Uncle Isaac" Felch that cutting for excess weight is a mistake.

GEORGE H. BURGOTT

MR. BURGOTT is known from Maine to California as the great Brown Leghorn expert and all round good fellow. As Superintendent of the Pan American, as judge of Leghorns at all the big shows in the country, and as a trusted railroad man, he is all right. We imagine the fraternity will be pleased at our artist's effort to present him.

Boston, Cincinnati and Scranton, the three big shows held this week, kept the fanciers, exhibitors and judges pretty busy and there is much speculation as to what happened at "Cincy" when the A. P. A. met to re-organize itself. The traveling secretary of the old society will no doubt inform us when the time comes. Mr. Tommaso E. Orr has a very winning way of writing reports of the doings of the Association. They make real good fillers and copy because they are original and cost nothing.

Preserving Eggs

We have read many articles with reference to keeping eggs fresh for a considerable time after they have been laid. The cold-storage warehouse has received its portion of condemnation, yet it serves the purpose very well in keeping eggs from one season to another. The Agricultural College of Germany makes a report from the experiments of Dr. Strauch, who made many experiments in different ways, beginning in July last, and running over into the beginning of spring. Of the eggs that were wrapped in paper and laid away eighty per ct. spoiled; of those kept in salicylic acid and glycerin eighty per ct. spoiled; preserved with salt, packed in bran and painted with a solution of salicylic acid and glycerin seventy per ct. spoiled; of those that were immersed in boiling water for from ten to fifteen seconds, one-half spoiled; of those kept in a solution of alum, also in a solution of salicylic acid, one-half spoiled; of those coated with soluble glass or varnished with chlodium or greased with bacon, forty per ct. spoiled; of those packed in wood ashes but twenty per ct. spoiled; of those treated with boracic acid and soluble glass and kept in a solution of permanganate of potash, twenty per ct. was lost; of those that were coated with vaselin kept good. Those kept in a solution of soluble glass all very good.

All the experiments with the liquid glass have proven very satisfactory in the keeping of eggs. As stated through the columns of this paper before, the only drawback to the solution of soluble glass is the fact that when the eggs are taken from the solution, if not immediately washed perfectly free from the solution in lukewarm water, the solution will dry on the outside of the shell, and when the shell is broken the pieces of fine glass are apt to get mixed in with the egg. When this is avoided by careful washing it is a very good medium for preserving eggs.

On the Davenport farm there is kept almost every known kind of geese and ducks, and they are successfully kept. We have never known of their mixing or mingling one with the other. We do not refer to the Pekin or Rouen ducks, or what might be called domestic ducks; we mean the Island or semi-wild varieties, the wood duck and many kinds of geese from all over the world.

BROWN'S BUDGET

Have you tried keeping a box of dry bran inside the poultry house, so the hens can have access to it at will.

Don't overlook charcoal and grit, both are very important during winter. One helps digestion and corrects other troubles, and grit is always indispensable.

A good many poultry raisers follow the Van Dreser plan of "starving and feeding," but the trouble is they do not do it for a definite purpose as Mr. Van Dreser does, with them it is simply a chronic habit.

In many sections where pure-bred poultry is kept mainly for egg production, there has been considerable complaint this winter of indifferent laying. In many instances, so far, not as good a per cent of eggs has been secured as during the severe weather of last winter. Why? Some have fed stronger hoping to induce egg laying but without getting the desired results.

At the big shows one hears a good deal about the importance of the good care of poultry. The writer at Madison Square was standing in front of a coop containing a prize cockerel of a certain breed. The owner came up and remarked: "G. O., how do you like him, eh? He's a nice bird. The fact is he had every possible chance to grow and develop. Never was crowded, or cowed, always had a good variety of food. Couldn't help but come out all right. Had a farmer raise some from identically the same eggs—as he was bred from one of three good hens mated with a fine cock—but you'd never think those the farmer raised were the same strain. They lack shape, size and are not as good in plumage. I will tell you good care counts a big lot in raising fine birds."

Exercise in the poultry yards is the "winter resort" for the hens. It is a health promoter and good health is the basis of profitable results with the poultry flocks.

Overheard by a man who understands chicken language. Scene: A stylish rooster meets a hen with a brood of ducks. Rooster: "Aha, Mariah, your long absence is now accounted for. You have basely deceived me, have been untrue to me—to think you would flirt with a quack too; fare thee well forever," and over the fence the rooster flew. Poor, innocent hen was the victim of the wiles of the incubator. Simply because she became a perambulating orphan asylum she was cruelly misjudged by Chanticleer.

If you have been careless and left the water in drinking vessels to freeze, pour hot water over the bottom of the vessels and you can soon turn the ice out. It is better to make a practice of throwing out the water when closing up the houses at night. All the feed troughs should be turned upside down every night, then there will be no trouble resulting from unexpected snow or rain.

No "condition powders" have ever been concocted that would counteract neglect, filth, and damaged grain feeding of poultry.

It is unfortunate that more liberal classification at the Shows is not given to some of the long-established breeds. Black Spanish, Dominiques, Polish, Javas and some other breeds are suffering on this account. No breed should be relegated to the O. A. Class, every breed possesses worth and has its friends and admirers.

The Country Gentlemen (a writer) says: "There are two branches of the poultry business. One is the breeding of standard-bred fowls, the other the production of fowls and eggs for market. These are the only profitable departments; the old-time barnyard fowl belong to neither." There is fact in a nutshell.

Mr. H. H. Babcock, a well-known fancier of Rhode Island, in an article in the same paper dealing with the poultry show as an educational and social function, says: "That man is to be pitied who can attend a first-class poultry exhibition, examine the various exhibits, and not be the wiser therefor. Such exhibitions are educational in their effects, and while they do afford a pleasant outing to those interested in fowls, they also instruct and stimulate the mind."

Photographic illustrations of prize birds is doing more to familiarize and educate what true-bred type is than can ever be accomplished by the score card or comparison methods of judging. Draw down to photograph size and permanence there is a chance for continued study by the amateur.

I recently visited a fancier near Baltimore who keeps his stock in a poultry house with the south side opened summer and winter. The fowls roost near, and almost up to the very front. They were in fine, healthy, sprightly condition, and producing a fine percentage of eggs. He said he rarely ever had any cases of cold or other troubles. The house is, however, well protected from north and west winds, being well located down on the southern slope of a steep hill.

"In some cases, close breeding—and, ocasionally, in-and-in breeding—seems to be in accordance with the laws of Nature; as with the wild turkey, which, in its natural state, resorts to these modes of breeding; and yet the race does not change in appearance or degenerate. The reason is that the breed is pure. In comparing any number of these birds, not the least dissimilarity is discernable; they all look alike, as they aways have, and always will. They are changed or deteriorated, only by crossing or confinement."—Old Poultry Book.

Results Obtained From Egg Hatching

Mr. Lewis publishes an article in a recent issue of "Farm Poultry" with reference to the sale of eggs for hatching, and the per cent fertility from same. He tries to tell us just what everyone should do who offers eggs for hatching for sale. He states that such a one is not selling eggs for market, and that he should not take any chances at the expense of his customers.

One would think from the reading of this article that the people who furnish eggs for hatching are not anxious that these eggs should turn out a large per cent fertility. No one is so anxious for this as is the seller of the eggs. The purchaser may think that he is anxious for good results, but his anxiety along these lines is almost nothing as compared with that of the seller of the eggs.

Nature, as we call it, is the only implicit power that can possibly govern the fertility of the eggs. Mortal man may have a plan, but he can neither add to nor detract from the fertility of the eggs that he may sell for hatching. All the plans that have ever been presented—and we have read thousands of them—have utterly failed when it comes to an increased fertility over and beyond the permission of Nature.

In connection with this, Mr. A. V. Meerch writes an article on "How Many Eggs Should a Hen Lay?" The natural egg production of a hen would be a sufficient number to produce one or two broods during the natural breeding season of the spring, and no more. It was never intended nor naturally created that these hens should be bred, trained and fed to produce from 200 to 250 eggs per year, as mentioned by Mr. Meerch. If the laws of nature were still continued in, and the hen would only produce from fifteen to twenty-five eggs in a season, those naturally produced eggs would most likely each one of them produce a living chick, and the producer of those eggs might well be satisfied with these results. But when we strain the condition of Nature up to the point of producing from five to ten times as many eggs as Nature ever intended them to do, we must simply divide up Nature's possibilities and remember that the fertility of the eggs is most likely to spread over the entire egg production of the hen in about the same proportion as to the increase of the eggs that she produces. A hen that lays 250 eggs per year, under the law of Nature as it originally existed, one egg in ten would produce a chick. So the ratio would go. As stated above, man may plan and contrive, and may succeed in having an egg machine in his hens that will produce even ten times as many eggs as Nature intended, but beyond this he cannot go.

Another writer, in "Farmer's Guide," states as follows: "There are too many people who try to get a heavy egg yield in the winter. They feed for that purpose alone, not thinking of the coming spring when the hatching season is on. Hens fed for heavy egg production will not lay as many fertile eggs as those not fed for that purpose." While not explaining this proposition as we have done above, the writer has learned from experience that in proportion to the increase of the egg yield, in the same proportion will the fertility decrease.

When domestication means forcing with food to produce excessive laying, the changed condition of crowded quarters and restricted foraging expeditions soon cause marked changes.

SHOWS AND SHOW AWARDS

Notes From the New York Show

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Rigg, of Iowa, Miller Purvis, of "Poultry"; Editor Schurman, of "Commercial Poultry"; Secretary Kohl, of "Inland Poultry"; Mr. DePuy, of "Poultry Advocate"; Messrs. Hunter & Robinson, of Boston, were all present looking after the interest of the poultry press.

The new paper "Poultry Husbandry", was on hand, with a full corps of assistants pushing the interest of their new paper, and the School of Poultry Culture, Waterville, New York.

Ever faithful Mr. Vallentine was there in the interest of "The Reliable", and he constantly presents the best side of everything to seekers after information.

The representative of the "Feather" was there looking after the interest of the two great papers, the "Feather" and the "American Fancier". Thomas is a chip of the old block, a great favorite among poultry fanciers, and a success among those looking for poultry periodicals. He deserves all he gets, and he certainly gets a lot of subscribers every time he goes to the Garden Show.

Artists Sewell, Graham, Schilling, Fox, and a number of photographers in the line were present in the Garden doing a great business. Mr. Charles, who represents White's Class Advertising in New York, was strongly in evidence. Mr. Charles deserves great success in his line.

If we were looking for a living success, we should select Mr. Castello, who represents the advertising department of Doubleday, Page & Co.'s periodicals. He deserves a great deal of credit for he has worked hard and faithfully to gain the confidence and secure the business from the habitats of the Garden.

Messrs. Nix and Betts were constantly on hand looking after the interests of the Prairie State Incubators and Brooders of which they had a most attractive display. The new Prairie State machines are so far ahead of any former hatching machinery made by this Company as to almost give them the right to claim the name of the Twentieth Century Prairie State Company Machines. If there is anyone any place that can take the lead of Brother Betts in handling business, we are anxious to discover that person and turn him over in competition with our friend.

Messrs. Bache, Randolph and their assistants were there with the products of the Star Incubator and Brooder Company, and did a land office business. The Star Company had a full line of incubators, brooders and feeds made by them.

The Pineland Incubator Company, the manufacturers of the great Pineland Hatching Machinery and Fidelity Chick food, were strongly in evidence, and turned out hundreds of beautiful white balls every day for the pleasure of the visiting public.

Mr. Charles A. Cyphers was there in charge of the display of Model incubators and brooders. Great has been his success, they say, and well deserved, as one must determine after a careful examination of his most beautifully constructed and self-convincing patterns of hatching machinery.

The Cornell people have an entirely new machine. The machines of this make have been thoroughly tested, and show their ability to do good work through the wonderful recommendations on display by this Company during the entire show. Messrs. Denny MacAlier and others in charge were kept constantly busy waiting upon the throng of customers anxious to have the Cornell.

The perpetual Hen Company, the new incubator company directly under the control of Mr. Oliphant, had a display there satisfying the public of the quality of their machinery through the constant hatching day by day of a grand lot of healthy chicks.

Freeman & Co. claimed their share of attention through the presentation of a new regulator that may be attached to any incubator.

The Cyphers Incubator and Brooder Company had a complete outfit of everything in their line gathered for the edification of the general public.

Messrs. Curtis & Dillingham and their well-trained corps of assistants did great work in entertaining the visiting public, by explaining and demonstrating the quality of their wares.

No one could be happier than Brother Russ, of the Excelsior Wire and Poultry Supply Company. He is the man that has everything known in poultry ware for sale on Vesey Street. No one knows anything of poultry without hearing of Brother Russ, and he always makes everyone contented and happy who comes within range of his voice.

Mr. George L. Harding being under the weather was not able to attend the New York Show, but his Manager was there presenting his magnificent line of goods, and handing out the beautiful new catalogue just issued by that Company. Every one interested in poultry foods or appliances of any kind should apply to George L. Harding, Binghamton, New York, for one of his new beautiful catalogues.

Mann bone cutters were right on hand, cutting and serving constantly to all comers some fresh-cut green bone for poultry. This firm has become as necessary to poultry culture as is good weather and suitable poultry houses, The Standard Bone Cutter was also represented.

The T. I. Root Company created a furore by their exhibit of a large display of working colonies of bees, beehives, honey extractors and methods of handling honey. These people believe thoroughly in the union of poultry, squabs, bees and fruit, as a money-making combination. It is a problem well worth consideration by everyone interested in rural affairs.

Mr. Geo. Ball is to be congratulated on the quality of his Buff Cochins. Mr. D. C. Peoples, of Uricksville, Ohio, came all the way East to exhibit some of his beautiful Black Cochins, winning first hen and pullet, also second cockerel.

E. B. Thompson, with his able assistant, Geo. W. Hilson, did a land office business in Barred Plymouth Rocks and eggs at the Garden, Hilson himself showing some beautiful White Plymouth Rocks.

Exmoor Farm was there with a long string of the many varieties bred by them. This is one of the successful poultry farms of the country. Their Brown Leghorns, their Penciled Plymouth Rocks, and other varieties might well be the envy of all interested in poultry.

Mr. R. L. Hutchins, of Rutherford, New Jersey, has a wonderful lot of beautiful Buff Plymouth Rocks.

No one seems to understand better producing beautiful Barred Plymouth Rocks than do the Bradley Brothers, of Lee, Mass. When Mr. Victor comes forth to compete with the world, he usually goes after the blues and gets them.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Wells, and Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Thompson were most cordially received as visitors at the Garden. No one can possibly forget these genial people since having made their acquaintance.

A. C. Hawkins, one of the greatest producers of Barred Plymouth Rocks, White Silver-Laced Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks of the highest character, as well as Silver-Penciled Wyandottes, was in the Garden meeting his friends, recording orders for early shipments, and taking notes of everything in sight.

Riverside Farm of Owego, New York, the home of James Forsythe, and those great big handsome Brown Leghorns, was well represented in the Show by the Hon. James himself, and some display coops of the largest and handsomest pullets we ever saw from Riverside. Some of them weighed seven pounds, and a cockerel, eight. James is the sole owner of these great, big Browns, and is still in the ring with the best of the kinds he breeds.

Mr. E. G. Wyckoff is becoming more and more interested in Partridge Wyandottes, Partridge Plymouth Rocks, Silver-Penciled Wyandottes, and Leghorns of all kinds. The blue ribbons seemed to roll his way whenever he sends his man Shay to the front with a string to exhibit.

Out of courtesy to his father for whom we have the highest regard, we wish to compliment Mr. Van Alstyne for his beautiful exhibit at the Garden. Mr. Van Alstyle's poultry is fine, and we presume the teachings at home made him very careful in preparing for exhibition.

The poultry from Rockhill Poultry Farm, under the management of Mr. Cory, who represents General McAlpine's interest, is a tribute to the careful selection of show winners when you go to the Garden.

Gedney Farm poultry, that is under the management of Frank Gaylor, of White Plains, came to the Garden strongly represented in Minorcas, Indian Games, Orpingtons and Wyandottes ready to please the world with quality.

Mr. D. Lincoln Orr, ex-President of the American Poultry Association, and a jolly good fellow, was represented in White Wyandottes and Light Brahma Bantams to the Queen's taste.

Mr. Richard Prueser, of Waterbury, Connecticut, entered two Buff Wyandottes—a hen and a cockerel—in the strongest kind of competition, winning two prizes. This is a well-deserved tribute to the careful management of Mr. Prueser, who always selects the best for his matings, and breeds a distinct line for quality.

John B. Haddaway, with his usual quality of Partridge Wyandottes, came to the Garden looking for prizes.

But the happiest man in all the gathering was Friend Arnold, the Columbian Wyandotte chief, who brings in his train quality to burn into every exhibition hall he has visited this season.

Of all the excitement in the Garden, nothing exceeded Orpington Avenue. Orpington Alley can not be permitted any more. Orpington Avenue is scarcely aristocratic enough a name for the residence of a week of such a display as came to the Garden. Percy Cook was there, representing the interest of William Cook & Sons. He did a great business and won scores of ribbons. He had the quality in all kinds and types of Orpingtons, and no one in the world knows better how to present their value to the general public. Mr. Cook always sells a lot of high-class poultry to visitors at every exhibition he attends.

Mr. D. W. Young, with White Leghorns that gathered in the ribbons, was at the Garden himself, looking after the interest of his entry. Mrs. Young was with them. They are a pair of fanciers fit to tie to.

GEDNEY FARM POULTRY YARDS

S. C. Buff Orpingtons S. C. Black Minorcas
White Wyandottes Cornish Indian Games

First and special pen, third pullet. That is our record on S. C. Buff Orpingtons at Madison Square Garden, Jan. 2-6, 1906. 1st, 2nd and 3rd on cock, hen, cockerel and pullet. and 1st and 2nd pen. Also $25.00 silver cup for best display. all varieties competing, and seven other specials were awarded our Buff Orpingtons at Albany (64 Buffs competing). 2nd cock, 2nd and 3rd hen, 1st, 2nd and 3rd on cockerel and pullet, Cornish Indian Games, at the same show. 36 ribbons on 28 entries. Breeding stock for sale at reasonable prices. Eggs for hatching, $3.00 per 13, $5.00 per 26. Buff Orpington and Black Minorca Eggs in one hundred lots for incubator use. Other varieties can only be supplied in limited numbers.

FRANK W. GAYLOR, Mgr. - Box J, - WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.

Mr. J. Hart Welch, of Douglaston, Long Island, made his maiden bow as exhibitor at the Garden, with a beautiful lot of Rose-Comb Brown Leghorns. Mr. Welch's stock is worthy of the attention of any fancier.

Mr. Rowland Story, Arlington Avenue, Brooklyn, was at the Garden with the best lot of Minorcas ever shown by him. Mr. Story has a strain of heavy egg-producers that have quality in every way, and he is always courteous and affable in his attention to his customers.

Mr. George H. Northrup as Judge, Mr. George H.. Northrup as producer of the best in both Single and Rose-comb Black Minorcas, and an all-around good fellow, was in the Garden in the double capacity of judge for Single-combs and a successful exhibitor of Rose-combs.

The world of poultry has become used to noticing the name of Arthur Trethaway among the most successful exhibitors in Minorcas. He was at the Garden, and had them better than ever. Mr. Hilldorfer, from Allegheny, Pennsylvania, had some good ones too.

Richard Oke and Wm. McNiel had a lot of good ones at both New York and Boston. Richard and William are a pair hard to beat. Seldom if ever are they equalled. When you get a prize away from them, you can congratulate yourself that you have something good.

D. P. Shove, the great Rhode Island Red king, was in the Garden with a lot of high-quality. We understand that he is in Cincinnati this week with a lot of world-beaters. May success be his.

Henry Hales was in the Garden with his heart-beloved Dorkings. Henry strongly contends that his Dorkings came direct from the little jungle fowl. We imagine that Henry would have to sit up a long time and work over time for several thousand years to bring Dorkings from those little miniature fowls.

Dr. A. H. Phelps, the grandest of all Faverolle and Lakenvelder producers, was at the Garden all the week. The doctor carried a bright smile on his face and a pocket full of blue ribbons just by way of a reminder that he had the best.

Charlie Jehl, of Long Branch, was there with some of those beautiful Buff Cochin Bantams that he breeds to win with. He had them of the best.

Mr. Clyde H. Prosper, who was elected President of the Bantam Association, who exhibits such beautiful Bantams, and who is large enough to come ahead, has it within his possibilities to bring the National Bantam Association back to its old standing. Will he accomplish this or not? is the question. Clyde, take hold at the strong end of the stick and push it along.

John Blunck and Barney Mosher are a great pair in Bantam Alley. If you do not see what you want, ask them, and they will soon produce it for you.

In pigeons, Mr. Chas. E. Schofield, of Potomac Lofts, Washington, D. C., did a great act in Pigmy Pouters, winning almost every prize competed for with the finest string yet shown in this country. Competition was keen, quality superb, and his extensive winnings an honor that he should be proud of.

We never tire of looking at the beautiful Owls produced by Mr. Eckert, of Allentown, Penn. Mr. Eckert is a high-class artist in producing and fitting these high-quality pigeons for the show-room. We can imagine one's love for such beautiful pigeons as these.

Special Prizes at New York

The following special prizes were awarded to our advertisers at the late New York Show:

In White Leghorns, D. W. Young won special for best cock bird, special for second best cock bird, special for second best hen, special for best cockerel, specials for best and second best pullet. These were all awarded to him on Single-comb White Leghorns.

Exmoor Farm won special for best display Duckwing Leghorns, special for second best cock Black Leghorn, special for second best hen Black Leghorn, special for second best cockerel Brown Leghorn.

Mr. E. G. Wyckoff, was awarded special for second best display Duckwing Leghorns, special for second best pullet Single-comb Buff Leghorn, special for second best pullet Single-comb Black Leghorn.

The following specials were won on Black Minorcas by Joseph Hilldorfer for best cock, two specials, special for second best hen, and Arthur Trethaway special for best cockerel, second best pullets, best pen. In addition to this Mr. Trethaway won special for second best cock bird, second best pullet, third best hen, third best cockerel, third best pullet.

Spratt's Patent specials went to Bradley Bros. for best Plymouth Rock any color hatched in 1905; to August D. Arnold for best Wyandotte any color hatched in 1905; to D. W. Young for best Leghorn any color hatched 1905; to McNeil and Oke for best bird in French breed hatched 1905. They also won specials for best Hamburg, best Polish, best any other variety, and best Bantam, all Spratt's Patent awards.

J. C. Blunck won two specials for best Duckwing Game hen and best Duckwing Game cockerel.

The American Plymouth Rock Club specials were won as follows: Second prize cock bird, fourth prize hen, first prize cockerel, fifth prize cockerel and best pen mated for breeding exhibition females, all to Bradley Bros.

For third prize cock bird, E. B. Thompson was the successful winner. Mr. Thompson also won special for second prize pullet, first prize pen, best pen mated for breeding exhibition males and best shaped male in the class.

Pigeons at New York

The display of pigeons at the great New York Show far exceeded anything of like character in Pouters, large and small, or as might be called, Regular and Pigmy Pouters. The display was the grandest ever gathered for competition. So much has been said of the Pigmy Pouter display that it is scarcely necessary to go further into the description. We wish to compliment the exhibitors of Carriers and Barbs for the great improvement in numbers and quality shown. We can turn back to our days as a Carrier fancier, and look with horror almost upon the quality of years ago as compared to the Barbs and Carriers of the present day. Fantails, like Tumblers, have become a countless throng. Every kind and character of color and style of marking, feather legs and shell crests, smooth legs and smooth heads, have been attached to this countless throng of toy pigeons that might be gathered into a museum to attract attention for years.

BROWN LEGHORN.

Jacobins, Magpies, Owls and Turbits are other divisions deserving great consideration. If one might have the time to minutely describe every specimen there, there would scarcely be enough room in three issues of the paper. We have often wished that the pigeon fanciers might take interest enough in a publication to warrant the recognition of all varieties in the columns of the papers. Pigeon fanciers do not seem to think that they are called upon to do anything in return for the many favors done them by the press.

The point of the pigeon exhibit in which we were most interested was that branch which might be called the squab-growing division. These are the Dragoons, the Runts, the Modaines, the Maltese, and the Homers, many of which are used for crossing upon the Homers, and in their purity to produce the highest class market squabs. We call the attention of all readers of this paper to the fact that the coming issues of the Feather will contain many valuable articles on the highest quality of stock for producing fancy squabs.

Nuts as Poultry Feed

Those who dwell in the country where there is a very plentiful supply of nuts of all kinds, such as walnuts, hickorynuts, hazelnuts and butternuts, should gather all of them they possibly can, and when the cold days of winter come, crack and mash up a large quantity for the poultry. The hens love to devour the meat in the shell of these nuts, and it is almost the equal of any kind of animal or meat food that you can give them. Hens will hunt and scratch by the hour among a lot of nut shells to get the kernel from the shell and the small bugs that often infest them. There is but little trouble connected with the harvesting of a large stock of nuts. The walnuts and butternuts can be piled up to dry with the hulls on and pounded or broken up with a heavy hammer for the hens during the winter months.

Martin's White Wyandottes won more prizes than any other exhibitor. First and Third Cockerel, First and Third Pullet, Second Cock, Second Hen and Second Pen. This was a remarkable win, owing to the fact that previous to this show they had been cooped nearly two weeks at the Toronto Show, and thus were not in as good condition as the birds they competed with.

Superb Winning Pigmy Pouters

Great Madison Square Show.

HERE'S A RECORD TO BE PROUD of. At the Great New York Show, held in Madison Square Garden, January 2–6, 1906, on 24 entries, we won 24 premiums as follows: Eleven firsts, 10 seconds, and 3 thirds. It is evident that this GREAT RECORD is a world breaker. It is a case of where blood will tell. We have all blue-blooded birds in our Lofts.

At the last Great Hagerstown Show, the Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts, on twenty-four entries, were awarded 10 firsts (out of a possible 11 firsts, 5 seconds, 2 thirds, 3 fourths, 3 fifths, and special for best bird in show.

All Bred in Line from the Finest American and English Winners.

We have a few fine Breeders for sale, which should breed you winners of "the blue" in any show. This opportunity won't last forever as our stock for sale is limited, the first come, first served.

The quality is here. The opportunity for such purchase does not often present itself.

COTTRELL'S ALFALFA MEAL

FOR POULTRY

Fowls give best returns when their feed is appetizing and contains the materials required for the vital and productive processes. One-half the solid matter in the fowl's body and over one-half the solids in an egg consist of protein. One-twelfth of the solid matter in the fowl's body and over one-third of the egg is mineral matter. These substances are necessary for making blood, bone, flesh, feathers and both the shell and its contents. Food supplying protein and mineral matter and productive, that's why Cottrell's Alfalfa Meal is an excellent poultry food. It is rich in mineral matter and protein which it contains in an easily digestible form. It contains 50 per cent more egg-making material and supplies the food elements which ordinary grains lack. Cottrell's Alfalfa Meal provides green feed the year 'round and gives grass conditions in mid-winter. It aids digestion, promotes vigorous growth, improves the quality of the eggs and imparts delicate flavor to the flesh. It's worth dollars to the poultryman. If your dealer cannot supply you, write to us direct. 100 lb. sack, $1.50; 500 lbs., $6.00 f. o. b. Elgin. Write for free circular.

Makes Fowls Healthy

Editorial Gossip

We regret to learn that Poplar Grove Farm, Hackensack, New Jersey, missed from the Madison Square Garden a White Rock cockerel shown in pen No. 545, and a Black Minorca hen, with two punches in left foot. Will anyone communicate with them who have received the birds by mistake.

Kehn's Minorca Farm, Hanover, Pennsylvania, has just made a great winning with their Minorcas at the late Scranton, Pennsylvania, Show. They must have good stock or they could not do so well.

As stated in several issues of our paper, it was gratifying to notice the quality of the stock of White Wyandottes that won the first and special at New York Show. Mr. Nixon certainly is to be congratulated on quality of the same.

We stated in an earlier issue of the American Fancier that New York had six thousand ninety-one entries, and Boston six thousand. This information came to us, and was recorded before the catalog of the Boston Show was issued. We have not as yet counted the entries in the Boston Show, but have been informed by those who claim to have counted them that there were five thousand and three entries, giving New York a thousand the best of it this time. New York, however, will change front another season. Mr. Crawford informs us he shall go for quality only, and not for numbers.

We have a letter from Mr. Thomas F. Morgan, Los Angeles, California, giving a short account of his attendance at the Southern California Poultry Show, held in Los Angeles. This exhibit contained over two thousand entries. Three large tents gave shelter for the fowls. Inside of the tents were aisles and coops, and every opportunity for viewing the poultry display. The American breeds and varieties were most numerous. White Wyandottes were shown in the largest numbers. Following these came Barred and White Plymouth Rocks. The English varieties were represented by the Orpingtons, some grand specimens. Barred Rocks, Columbian Wyandottes, in fact, all the Wyandottes and Mediterranean breeds were well represented. Ventilation and light were excellent. Large crowds thronged the tents day and night, which were lighted with electricity. Mr. Morgan states that there are great opportunities for poultry growing in Southern California. It must be a most pleasant surprise to visit a mid-winter show held out of doors in tents that were comfortable and delightful to the visitors, and most excellent for the display of poultry, usually injured more or less by the heated condition of overly warm buildings.

Knickerbocker Poultry Yards, Englewood, New Jersey, report to us that they held a splendid show in that town, having four hundred forty-nine entries, some few pigeons and pet stock; everything was most satisfactory, and they are determined to hold another show next winter. Knickerbocker Yards cultivate Leghorns, Plymouth Rocks, and Wyandottes.

Prof. A. A. Brigham, of Marlboro, Massachusetts, has established a course in the teaching of poultry raising for the benefit of all persons in and about Lincoln, Nebraska. The Professor is quite equal to the emergency, and will most certainly make a success along these lines. The people of Lincoln are fortunate to have one so well informed in their midst as a teacher.

Letter from Secretary Roberts of the Boston Show, under date of January 23rd, reads as follows: "Broke all previous records at the gate. Look out for a big show next year in Boston." Boston Show dates of next year are the same as this, the mid-week in January. Secretary Roberts claims to have made more profit from this winter's Boston Show than was ever made before.

Edgar E. McIntosh writes and asks us to make the following correction: That the membership of the Wyandotte Club should read one dollar for membership fee, one dollar for dues. Presume that this means that you must pay a dollar when you join, and a dollar annual dues thereafter.

Turkey roosts are quite as necessary for success in growing turkeys as are any other buildings or poultry appliances about the farm. Posts eight or ten feet long, set in the ground for uprights, with cross beams from one to the other, and round poles laid over these, makes the ideal turkey roosts for the mature turkeys and the young that are properly trained to come home at night and roost near the barn and be fed.

Never delay past the middle of February or the first of March in the cooler climates in the selection of the males and females of your turkeys that are to be used for producing the stock during the coming season.

New strong, vigorous blood is the only method known to man whereby blackhead can be driven out.

Ducks may be successfully raised on dry land, where sufficient water is supplied to quench their thirst. The best results are always obtained with waterfowl of all kinds that are provided with a swimming pool for both bath and feeding. Healthier ducks can be grown outside in this way than can possibly be grown by the dry land method. Broiler ducks can be very successfully grown on dry land with only sufficient water to quench their thirst. The breeding stock, however, should be provided with the swimming pool.

Animal food of some kind is an absolute necessity for poultry. Bugs and worms are the natural animal food diet for poultry on the range. When confined, a substitute must be supplied.

We notice recently the statement that six million and a half of turkeys are produced each year in the United States. As there are twenty million families in the country, we feel very sorry for the fourteen millions of them for whom no turkey is provided. Some one is getting more than his share.

If some of these experiment stations continue in the increased egg yield, some of the hens will have to have the credit of laying more than one egg a day, or the scientific gentlemen will have to turn backward in their reports.

Every farmer in the whole world should keep poultry. They should have standard-bred fowls. Those who teach the value of mongrels and cross-breeds do not seem to understand that the eggs from straight-bred poultry sell for almost double on the market what a mixed lot will bring.

We have a letter before us asking how to distinguish the males from the females in ducks and pigeons. You have two chances with the ducks: the duck quacks, the drake speaks in a husky voice. The duck has a smooth tail, while the drake has several curling feathers at the root of the tail. These two differences can be readily recognized, but no man on earth can be positively certain of the sex of the pigeons until he sees them making love, one to another during the mating season.

A farmer in New York reports the product of forty-eight hens for one year as follows: Eggs and chickens sold, $61.65; eggs and chickens consumed, $10; increase in stock, $13.60; total, $85.20, almost $1.80 from each fowl kept. This is certainly doing remarkably well on a small town lot. Is there any farmer in the country that can prove he made $37.25 from any acre of grain grown on the farm.

The most valuable appurtenances to the poultry houses in winter are dry floors, dry interior, dry dust bath, plenty of litter upon the floor, and a proper amount of well selected grain to scatter about for the poultry to hunt for through the winter. Poultry that stands about, first on one foot and then on the other nine-tenths of the day, and puts in the other tenth picking up grains of corn that have been cast to them for food are not likely to give much return of eggs. Keep them busy scratching for their daily ration, and they will prove profitable, provided the ration is well selected for an egg production.

All ventilation for poultry houses should come from the front windows, which should be lowered at the top every day in the year, the doors inside kept shut in cold, damp, or blowing weather, to prevent draughts passing through the poultry house. A window down at the top in your bed-room will prove beneficial to your health, provided there is no opening on the other side to create currents of cold, unhealthy air over your person. It is not the air that hurts, but the draughts and currents of air. The hen might roost all night in zero weather out in a tree and not take cold, but the same hen might take cold in a single hour roosting in a draft of damp air.

When you select a breed of chickens, ducks, turkeys or geese, stick to them pure and true, and make the most possible out of them. Do not change from one to another. Select that which you like the best, and breed it in the highest state of perfection for either exhibitions or utility purposes.

The score card show of the Western Connecticut Poultry Association held at Winsted proved to be a great success. The next annual exhibition will be held December 11 to 14, 1906, one week earlier than last year. Mr. G. L. Foskett was elected president, and Mr. L. C. Copewell secretary, for the coming year.

The election of Grant M. Curtis to the presidency of the American Poultry Association smashes several precedents. It has been an unwritten law for many years that no editor of a poultry paper should be elected president of the A. P. A. It has also been a custom to select the president from the State in which the annual meeting is held. We congratulate the old society, and especially the members present at Cincinnati in breaking away from two extremely sentimental precedents. We are of the opinion that Mr. Curtis will make a very good president, and keep a tight rein on all speedway legislation.

The re-election of Mr. T. E. Orr, as secretary of the American Poultry Association is no surprise to us. He wanted the office, and knew how to get it.

We understand that the next annual meeting of the American Poultry Association will come East, and that New Jersey is figuring on having it during the Newark Show week in 1907. As New Jersey is one of the greatest poultry states in the Union, and has never had the honor of being recognized by the A. P. A., a meeting of the latter in the Mosquito State will be in order. There are many splendid fanciers in New Jersey, and much good can be accomplished if the members of the Executive Committee see fit to vote to hold the next annual meeting of the American Poultry Association at Newark, New Jersey.

Mr. George "Pan" Burgott is going to England next fall, and takes over a string of American bred birds to show at the Dairy and Palace exhibitions. The particulars of this important deal will be published within a month or two.

Our old friend, Major Theodore Sternberg, of Ellsworth, Kansas, attended the annual banquet of Kansas Stock Growers Association, held at Topeka recently. The leading paper of that city remarks: "Toastmaster McNeal called on Major Theodore Sternberg to respond to the toast 'chickens.' A more happy choice of a speaker could not have been made, and most of the time was taken in eulogizing the hen. The speech was the hit of the evening, especially from the standpoint of the stockbreeders, who have a weakness for the helpful hen and her master." We have known the Major a great many years, and can appreciate his talk on "henology," because he loves a good fowl, and is a sincere and thoroughbred fancier. We only regret that there are no more Sternbergs in the fancy.

The big wind-up show of the season will be at Pittsburg, Pa., the week of February 19 to 24, 1906. New Empire Coops for breeding pens have been ordered, which, in addition to fine wire coops owned by the Pittsburg Fanciers Club, will make a great showing. The judges selected are of the old guard, viz., Sharp Butterfield, G. O. Brown, and Chas. McClave. A very good trio. Entries close February 7th. G. C. Sutch, 4 Lyden Street, Pittsburg, is Recording Secretary.

The Scranton Poultry Show, held January 15 to 20, at the Music Hall, Scranton, Pa., was one of the finest and best functions of the kind ever held in America. Entries were limited to one thousand birds, and it is a pleasure to state, the limit was reached, and something more. Owing to the lack of room late entries were returned.

Music Hall is not the best place in the world to hold a poultry show in. There is no daylight, and the floor space is limited. But fine electric lights and central location caused a big success and great attendance. Spratts did the cooping and feeding, and it was up to the top notch of efficiency, thanks to Deacon A. L. Sparks, who handled the Spratts end of the business. He did himself proud, and well earned the title of "Signor Martini" bestowed upon him by the genial treasurer, Mr. Megorgee.

Mr. Geo. L. Stevenson, a veteran fancier of old, did good and hard work as superintendent of the Scranton Show. He knew his business, and understood the whys and wherefores of a show of such magnitude.

The attendance at the Scranton Show exceeded the expectations of the management. It was great. The aisles were crowded with interested visitors from early morning until late at night.

President J. W. Shiebel, Jr., was confined part of the week to his house, owing to a severe attack of tonsilitis, but managed to make matters very pleasant for the visiting fanciers when he was present. Secretary Weeks, and Vice-Presidents Alden, Weddigen, and Ricker, and treasurer F. O. Megorgee worked hard to please all present, and succeeded. As Senator Peirce remarked, "A great show, and a great lot of boys to run it."

The American classes were very fine, Barred Rocks being strictly up to high water mark in quality, notably, first cock, cockerel, hen and pullet. White Rock classes were not so large, but teeming in quality, first hen being a beauty in size, style, and color. Buff Rocks had small but fine classes.

Wyandottes had excellent classes, the Silvers being about the best lot we have seen this season, the first pen winning special for best pen of any variety in the show—a great honor. Clean open lacing and correct type ruled in the Silvers. White Wyandottes were strong in numbers and quality, first pullet being a beauty, so good that Deacon Sparks could not keep away from her coop any length of time. Buff Wyandottes were excellent, notably, first cockerel, which was a beautiful bird in color and shape. First cock hen and pullet were also very good.

Golden Wyandottes had but small classes, but good in a few of the winners. Partridge Wyandottes were a fine lot, first cock being a star in color and shape. Columbian Wyandottes made up another strong class, the first cockerel being one of the best males of this variety we have seen. The Silver Penciled Wyandottes shown were first-class.

Asiatics had small classes, except in Langshans, which were very fine in quality. Light Brahmas had quality good enough to win at New York or Boston, and a few real good Partridge Cochins were in the coops.

Hamburghs also had small classes, but quality was about the average. Rhode Island Reds had great classes, with quality to burn all along the line, one of the best exhibits of this variety we have ever handled. Houdans were also a goodly lot.

One of our exchanges states that the nests should be kept as clean as the roosting places; we say, cleaner. The more cleanliness within reason, the healthier will be the poultry. No one imagines that a poultry or chicken house can or should be kept as clean as a parlor or bedroom, but they should be kept clean enough to prevent the possibility of unsanitary conditions undermining the health of the fowls, and to prevent the presence of filth and insect vermin.

The hens that pay their way are the hens that lay lots of eggs when prices are high. The man or woman who makes the money from keeping poultry are those who understand the trick of getting lots of fresh-laid eggs in winter.

The Farmers' Advocate states as follows: "Turkey herds are a means of livelihood for a great many families in the great Sacramento Valley in California. Turkeys are raised in single herds of from 500 to 3,000 birds, valued all the way from $2 to $3 each. A drove of 3,000 turkeys is more difficult to manage than is a flock of 3,000 sheep. The turkeys are more wandering in their disposition. The only way to keep the birds healthy and plump is to let them drift. The turkey herders follow the flocks with shepherd dogs and guard them from danger, and confine their wanderings."

Mr. Monroe Jones, of Oklahoma, states that hens produce as many eggs on Kaffir corn and water as did the hens on free range. Of course, we do not know how well the hens did on the free range, but we imagine that there would not be much profit keeping hens fed on nothing but Kaffir corn and water. But there is no telling what may be accomplished in the hen business yet.

More is lost through the careless preparation of poultry for market than can be imagined. We copy the following from the "Ruralist" relative to same: "Much profit is lost through careless ways of preparing dressed poultry for market. At times poultry that is scalded for picking is put into water so hot that it draws or shrivels the skin. If the skin is broken it shows dark spots that are quite unattractive. When scalding poultry have the water warm enough to loosen the feathers, but not so hot as to scald the skin. When dry picked, the work should be quickly and very carefully done, so as not to injure the skin and pull them out of shape. At all times give plenty of time and attention to this work, so it may be well and nicely done, for more profit will come from one shipment that will grade high class in the market than will come from six sent in poor condition. Those who have the best to sell are the ones to gain the profit, and, no matter how well grown and fattened the fowls may be, but they will not grade high unless properly dressed for market."

Ducks, in fact all kinds of water fowls, must have a dry place where they can rest at night during the summer months. They will take kindly to the hillside and rest upon the grass; in winter they should be provided the shelter of an open shed, littered with straw or hay, to keep their feet dry and warm. This prevents rheumatism, which is most destructive to all kinds of waterfowls that are exposed to the cold and snow during the winter nights without any shelter.

Barley is most prized as a poultry food in England. It is a great substitute for both oats and corn. Ground oats and barleymeal makes a fine mixture, both for egg production, and when corn meal is added, a splendid ration for fattening fowls for market.

Clean eggs sell better in the market than do soiled ones. Soiled eggs may be fairly well cleaned with vinegar diluted with water. Washing of eggs, however, smears them and makes them unattractive. If the dirt can be scraped off with a piece of glass or cleaned off with a piece of sandpaper, it is better than washing. The best way to prevent their becoming soiled is through watchfulness, and by giving them clean nesting places.

Never keep the hens shut up when the ground is dry and the weather is warm. Mother Earth is their natural friend, and they love to cultivate her.

An application of ice-cold water to a frozen comb as soon as it is discovered will take out all the frost. Follow this with an application of kerosene, and the comb will quickly improve.

The process of growing bees, extracting the honey, bottling and offering the same for sale was demonstrated at many of the poultry shows the past winter. Since the introduction of the bees that do not sting, they should become more popular. We imagine, however, that even the stingless variety have a hot foot.

Every one can raise a few ducks and geese each season. It may take a little extra care, but they are remarkably nice for a roast on Sunday during the winter months.

Always breed for a better egg production, better market poultry, and better exhibition fowls. Each adds largely to the profit of keeping poultry. Never fatten and sell a hen in the spring of the year that is likely to lay prolifically during the early spring months. After the egg supply has been exhausted is the time to fatten and market them; not just as they begin to lay.

Since issuing the Government Bulletin on how to grow guinea fowls, there seems to be an active demand for it. As soon as people understand the value of the guinea hen, they will be more generally kept. They do make a little noise, but this breaks the monotony of country life. Bulletin 224, U. S. Department of Agriculture tells fully of their cultivation.

MEETING OF THE AMERICAN POULTRY ASSOCIATION

At a meeting of the American Poultry Association, Music Hall, Cincinnati, January 18th, some matters of importance to the whole fraternity were passed upon, we trust to the future benefit of the association. Mr. Grant M. Curtis, of Buffalo, New York, was elected president, his term of office to begin July first next. Mr. T. E. Orr, of Beaver, Pennsylvania, was re-elected secretary and treasurer. The committee appointed some time since to propose amendments to the constitution and by-laws reported as follows:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS.

The committee of seven appointed to report at this meeting on amendments to the constitution, as proposed by Mr. Baerman and contained in the 12-page circular sent out by Secretary Orr, reported through its chairman, Mr. Curtis, as follows:

"Mr. President and fellow members:—At our meeting held at 8:30 this morning we took action on four of the proposed amendments to the constitution and by-laws, and beg to recommend as follows:

"First, That we resume publication of the pamphlet entitled 'Proceedings of the American Poultry Association,' same to be of uniform size and style, with former issues, thus making these pamphlets suitable for binding; also that the secretary-treasurer edit these proceedings, subject to the approval of the outgoing and incoming presidents.

"Second, That the Secretary-Treasurer's salary, beginning with January 1, 1906, be $600.00 per year.

"Third, That at each annual meeting the Secretary-Treasurer shall present a written report of the business of the past year, a part of which report shall be a summary of the receipts and disbursements since the close of the previous financial year.

"Fourth, That Roberts Rules of Order be adopted as a parliamentary guide to our proceedings, subject to special rules that may be adopted.

"Fifth, That a committee of twelve, together with the president and secretary, making a total of fourteen, be appointed to meet at the call of its Chairman to consider and report for action at our next annual meeting on all further proposed or necessary changes in the Constitution and By-Laws, with special instructions to consider carefully the question of the division of America into territorial and district organizations which shall be auxiliary to this Association; that the railroad and hotel expenses only of this committee be paid out of the Association funds."

Respectfully submitted:

GRANT M. CURTIS,
T. E. ORR,
THOMAS RIGG,
F. D. BAERMAN,
LESTER TOMPKINS,
D. LINCOLN ORR,
THEO. HEWES."

Report adopted unanimously.

The committee on publication that had charge of letting the contract for and supervising the printing and binding of the latest revised edition of the American Standard of Perfection presented its report, which was read by the Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Fred L. Kimmey, and adopted unanimously. This committee consisted of Fred Kimmey, Chairman, D. Lincoln Orr, T. E. Orr, J. H. Drevenstedt, and Grant M. Curtis.

Mr. D. Lincoln Orr next moved that a new publication committee, to consist of three members, namely, Mr. Fred L. Kimmey, Chairman, President-Elect Curtis, and Secretary Orr be appointed and empowered to arrange for and get out a further edition of the new Standard as soon as practicable, inasmuch as the first edition of fifteen thousand copies will soon be exhausted. The following verbatim report was furnished by the official stenographer:—

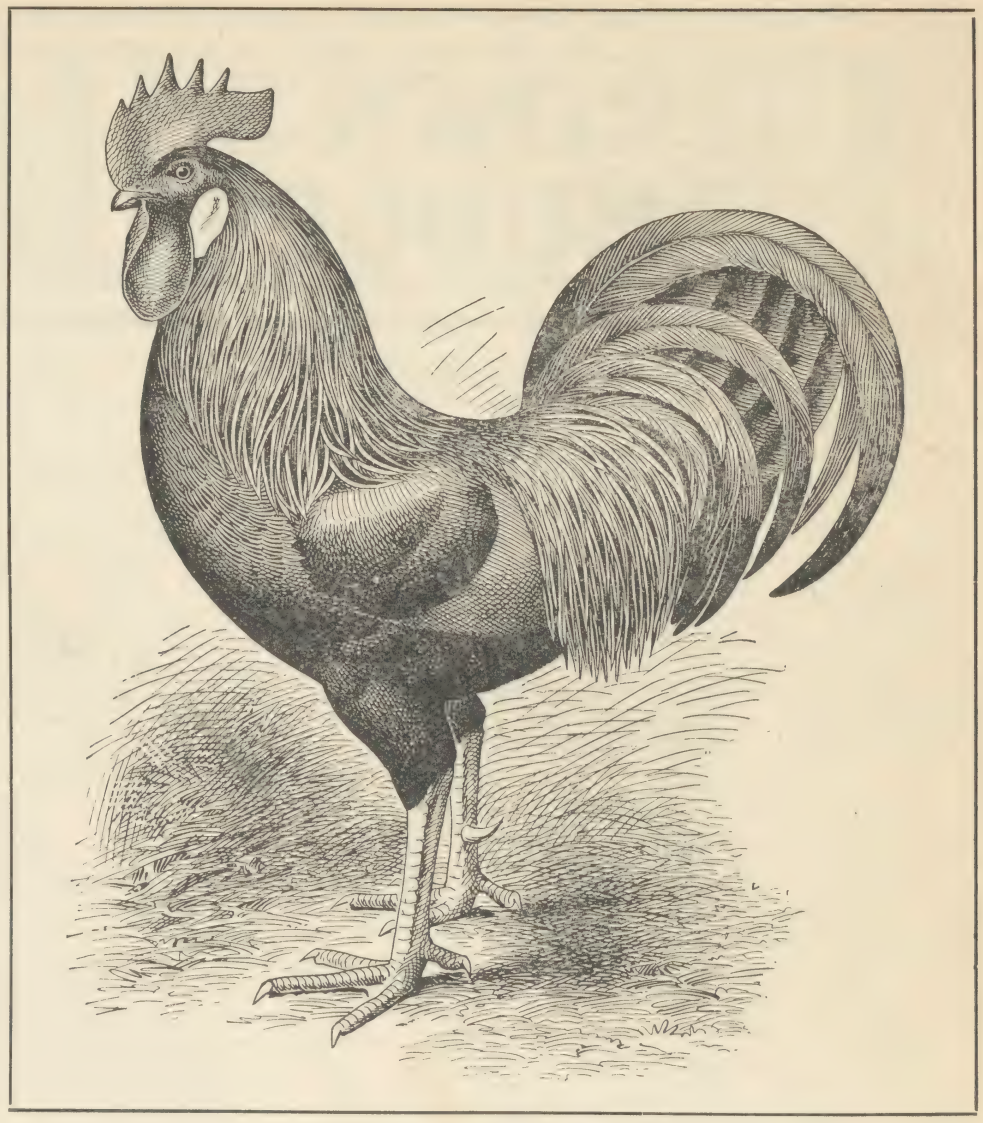
"Mr. Baerman: Mr. President, I think this committee, which has just been suggested, will be more competent than the Society to decide what to do in regard to the new edition, and how it is to be gotten out; therefore, I move as an amendment to the motion before the house that this Committee of Three which has been announced in that motion shall have power to decide when the new edition shall be issued, and how many books shall be issued; and also shall have power and authority to put in the new edition such corrections as that Committee decides are necessary; also that that Committee have the power to include the new breeds and new varieties which it is proposed, and to conform to the general idea of the work; that the Committee also have power to edit and include in the new edition any amendments which may be proposed and accepted in regard to any breeds in the Standard, or to be voted upon.

"Mr. Curtis: May the stenographer include in that motion that this Committee is to make only such changes as are within the provisions of the constitution; also, that it may incorporate not only said changes, including the several new varieties, but also such amendments to the constitution and by-laws as are authorized at this meeting?

"Mr. Baerman: I accept that suggestion as a part of my amendment.

"The Chair: It seems to me that this would leave the matter about where it should be. It would place all necessary authority in the hands of the Committee. That Committee is thoroughly competent to handle all details as well as the members of this Association. They are practical men and old fanciers. I believe that that amendment is the thing that we want. Are there any further remarks to be made along this line? Are you ready for that question? All in favor of the motion as amended will respond, etc.

"The motion carried.



"Mr. Baerman: I understand that the amendment has been adopted, and that now we shall have a vote upon the motion as amended, or else it is not operative.

"The Chair then put the question on the original motion, as amended, and the same carried unanimously."

The usual number of vice-presidents and executive committee were elected When more information has reached us we shall take up and discuss carefully what happened at Cincinnati.

BLACK MINORCA COCK

Fattening Turkeys in Confinement

We copy the following from the "Turkey Farmer," which points very conclusively to the value added to all turkeys grown that are properly prepared before sending them to market:

"The method of fattening turkeys most generally practised on our farm is to let the birds run at large, and give them all the corn they wish to eat. This plan involves little labor, and sometimes gives fairly good results. Last year, the Utah Experiment Station made some tests in fattening turkeys in confinement, with the aim to improve the meat in point of both quantity and quality. A feeding test of a month's duration before Christmas was made with six young, but practically mature, rather small Bronze turkeys raised under ordinary farm conditions. At the time of purchase they weighed 65½ pounds, and cost 13 cents a pound, or $8.50. Next day they weighed 67.1, and the day after 67.4. The average of these latter weighing 65.7 pounds, were taken as the starting basis. During these feeding tests the birds were kept in a pen 10 by 10 feet in the general poultry house, and were never let out. The pen has an open front, with a curtain door of factory cotton. The roosting pen, boarded up on three sides, is provided with a curtain door to drop on cold nights, but was never closed. All but two birds had good health throughout. These two were part of the time ailing, and this reduced their gain in weight.

"The feeding was done in the followlowing manner: In the morning whole wheat was scattered in a little straw on the floor; at noon corn was given; at night, a mash. Skimmed milk was always before them. No other animal food was given. They had all the sugar beets and lucerne hay they could eat, and grit was supplied in abundance. During the first eight days the mash consisted of two parts bran and shorts, and one-fourth part ground wheat, mixed with water. No mash was given for the next eight days. For the remainder of the test one-fourth part of oats was added to the above recipe. During the first three weeks twice as much whole wheat was fed as corn, and during the last week about equal amounts of each. During the first two weeks a little beef scrap was also fed. Total cost of feed came to $1.01, or about 17 cents per fowl. This, however, was slightly modified by the sale, during the last week, of one of the birds. In three weeks the six birds had gained 13.3 pounds. This added to the gains made by the remaining five birds during the last week, made a gain of 16.4. Of this, 13.2 pounds was made by four of the birds, the other two making up the balance. The cost of each pound of gain was 6.2 cents. When sold, the birds weighed 82 pounds, and after dressing 76.2 pounds, a loss of about 7 per cent. The dressing consisted of bleeding and plucking the feathers. The price realized for the dressed birds was 17½ cents a pound, or $13.05 for the lot. This is $4.55 more than the price paid for them. Deducting the cost of food, there is a profit left of $3.54 on the original investment of $8.50. Those who ate the birds declared they had never eaten turkeys of better quality. We will leave it for our readers to figure out, on this basis, what profits they can expect from this method of fattening their turkeys. We have had the best success, and the finest meat, by giving to the flock a mash, once a day, all they could eat, of boiled pumpkins, squashes, potatoes, &c., made thick with half pea and half corn meal, with some bran added, and a good supply of corn at night. Such feeding methods are profitable."

BROWN'S BUDGET

The Boston show proved that New England is still the home of the grand Light Brahmas. Fifty Columbians is a good entry for a new breed, before it has received standard recognition. Public recognition, however, "cuts as much ice" as any A. P. A. endorsement, but both should travel hand in hand together. One hundred and eighty Rhode Island Reds makes a pretty sunset glow in an alley that is a drawing card to exhibitors and visitors. And when you get a class of ninety-four Dorkings together, all fine specimens, it's a show within a show—it's so seldom the case. Good for Boston.

Whole corn is not a good feed to give too liberally to growing pullets. It is apt to produce fat. It should be used with judgment, a little every other day will be beneficial. Where you have a lot of cockerels by themselves, don't be afraid to give plenty of whole corn at night.

Lack of occupation in winter where many hens are kept together often causes them to develop objectionable habits. Plenty of litter, such as short, dry straw, beans, or corn husks, and where fodder is cut for stock the portions of short bits of stalks left are also good to use as scratching material. Fine cracked corn is excellent to scatter among the litter. A suspended cabbage, or chunk of cooked meat hung up so that it requires exercise to pick at it often saves the development of bad habits in a flock of hens.

A silver spangled cock, entered by Dr. J. S. Wolfe, at Madison Square, was in some way overlooked by me when judging. The mistake was not discovered until the awards had been given to the press—then it was too late for correction. The cock should have been an easy winner of first. He was one of the best of the breed I ever handled.

The question has been asked me if Columbian Wyandottes are not inclined to "have yellowish white plumage." Like all white breeds some will occasionally show creamy undercolor, especially the yellow legged varieties, but not "yellowish" color. That good Columbians are as white as Brahmas, and with black points as strongly contrasting, was well assured by August Arnold's prize pens at Madison Square.

The Plymouth Rock Bantam is not making very rapid headway. There is still too much size and a lack of real true Barred Rock feathering. The markings are more like the American Dominiques. Many years ago there were some "cuckoo bantams" in this country, English productions. The color of legs was a reddish flesh color, and that was about all the difference between them and the present Plymouth Rock Bantam.

The agricultural papers are now devoting considerable attention to pure bred poultry culture. Although some of the advice and instructions seem of an amateurish nature, much of it is practical. It shows that farmers are slowly but surely recognizing the superiority of pure bred fowls over mongrels. Some of the articles that appear in the daily press is "startling" information, and it would seem some reporters—probably space writers—have fowl pipe dreams.

A woman recently remarked to the writer that she was getting about as many eggs from ninety-seven hens this winter as she did last winter from two hundred. She said "two large flocks never did as well proportionately as small ones." Correct. Crowding too many hens in a small space is sure to lower the egg yield percentage.

I find this twentieth century wisdom in an exchange. "Pip is caused by ulcerated bones in the throat. The disease can be easily cured. A small bit of butter the size of a nut and a bit of aloes the size of a pea—make a pill with the aloes and butter and put it down the hen's throat. In an hour the hen will be cured." Now will you be good?

It is said Mexican women test eggs by placing the two ends to their lips, on the theory that the small end of a good egg is observably cooler than the big, or air bubble end. If both ends are of same temperature the egg is bad.

Don't wash eggs. It destroys the bloom of a fresh egg, and it never gets back its fresh look. Keeping the nests clean is best.

There is no danger of "small families" among the American hen Biddies. They'll just keep on laying eggs, and the incubators will do the rest—though the hen should be allowed to rest when she becomes broody. Don't souse her in a tub of water or use other harsh means. Always remember she is the mother of your flock—one of 'em anyway—and deserves humane treatment.

Harford County, Md., will hold a county poultry show on February 16 and 17, at Belair. Only breeders in the county can enter birds, as the object is to encourage home breeders. The display will be judged by a poultry expert. The idea of county shows is a good one. A poultry show in every county in the State would be a good idea, and then in a year or two hold a State exhibition in Baltimore.

A writer in the Ohio Poultry Journal says a poultry train was recently run on the Missouri Pacific line through Kansas, under the auspices of the Kansas State Agricultural College. Twelve stops were made along the line, the cars remaining one day in each place, and talks on poultry topics are given. Major Theo. Sternberg accompanied and gave instructions in judging. On an average over seven hundred people attended each meeting. Further trips of this character for the coming year are contemplated.

SHOWS AND SHOW AWARDS

Leghorns at Boston

Among the Single Comb Browns, the first cock, owned by Tenny and Harrington, needs no further comment than that he won the champion challenge cup for best male, besides the color and shape specials in his class. Second and fourth cocks, exhibited by the same owners, were not up to the superb quality of first, but were good. Third, owned by Exmoor Farms, formerly first World's Fair cock, was not in best show shape here. First hen, owned by Exmoor, was a large, beautiful light brown colored one. Second, belonging to Tenny and Harrington, was close up to first, but a shade darker. Third, exhibited by C. S. Cook, Jr., was smaller than any of the other winners in the class; of fine type, and, while free of brick and shafting, not as finely stippled or colored as the two preceding her. Fourth, fifth, and sixth were all large hens, of the soft light brown kind.

First and second cockerels, owned by Tenny and Harrington, were evenly balanced, good allround birds. Third was very similar, but fails principally in wing color. Fourth, owned by Exmoor, was a nice bird. However, in stature and tail carriage much could be desired in this class, even among some of the winners. Fifth, later in the week, deserved a higher place.

First pullet, belonging to Exmoor, also shape special winner, was a large, graceful pullet, of a very light brown shade. Second was not as typical in shape, but superior in color, winning female color special. This was also exhibited by Exmoor Farm. Third, belonging to Cook, was a female approaching type and color scheme of third hen. Pullets were the biggest class, and several good ones were left over. The novice class included an especial nice cockerel, owned by C. C. Witty.

In the Rose Comb Brown class the first cock, owned by E. R. Spencer, was an especially brilliant rich red bird, but ragged, especially in tail. Second, belonging to Mrs. Geo. B. Inches, beautifully concaved, with fine full tail, but showing little striping, and not enough brilliancy. Third, belonging to Buffney Noyes, was beautifully shown, in the pink of condition, and a corker in every section, with fine green in wings and breast, and in tail, but orange in color, not red. Fourth, owned by Inches, is evidently past his prime, but a good one, nevertheless.

First hen was a large, evenly light brown bird. Second was smaller, with lapping comb, color special winner, and one that would stand side by side comparison with the best of the single comb. Third and fourth were also finely stippled ones, nearly free of brick and shafting, but darker. All shown by same owner. In the cockerel class first and shape special went to a large one with correct type, good in all sections; shown by Inches. Second and color special, exhibited by Spencer, was not as stylish as first, but a good one, as was third, shown by same owner, having in addition wonderful striping, but sickles were not out. Fourth, belonging to W. T. Liddell, being short to the others mostly in size, and this only a little. These four were wonderfully good rose comb brown cockerels. Fifth, owned by H. K. Tozer, was very large, but lacking in color and style to the others.

First, second, and third pullets were all good ones in color and stippling; fourth and fifth going to two birds of a bunch of fine, large shapely pullets.

In the Single Comb White class the first cock, belonging to D. W. Young, was a splendid specimen, with which little or no fault could be found in any section. Second, same winner, was a trifle stilty, and lacking in finish to winner. These faults were claimed not to be habitual to the bird. Third, owned by W. J. Blake, and fourth and fifth, shown by Elm Poultry Yards, were three cocks, of superlative merit.

First hen, belonging to Young; second and third, owned by Elm Poultry Yards, were three particularly fine hens, either of which might have been first, and little fault could have been found, first winning in the nice little finishes in style which make the ideal Leghorn female. Fourth; also shown by Young, was of a larger, coarser build, while fifth, owned by Blake, lacked in conditions mostly. First cockerel, which also won shape special, and shown by Young, was of the ideal make-up of first cock. Second, shown by Young, third, fourth by Elm Poultry Yards, and fifth by Blake, were placed mostly in order named for slightest variations in quality. However, by the third day, I regretted to notice that one or two of them was failing in comb, due probably to the usual plus confinement. First pullet, from Elm Poultry Yards, a large, very white, shapely pullet, the whitest bird in all sections shown, and best of all, with good yellow legs, too. Second, belonging to Young, was a bird with a beautiful Leghorn sweep, top of head to tip of tail, but slightly short in shank, and likewise, as shown here, in

White Wyandottes — Cornish Indian Games

First and special pen, third pullet. That is our record on S. C. Buff Orpingtons at Madison Square Garden, Jan. 2-6, 1906. 1st, 2nd and 3rd on cock, hen, cockerel and pullet, and 1st and 2nd pen. Also $25.00 silver cup for best display, all varieties competing, and seven other specials were awarded our Buff Orpingtons at Albany (64 Buffs competing). 2nd cock, 2nd and 3rd hen, 1st, 2nd and 3rd on cockerel and pullet, Cornish Indian Games, at the same show. 36 ribbons on 28 entries. Breeding stock for sale at reasonable prices. Eggs for hatching, $3.00 per 13, $5.00 per 26. Buff Orpington and Black Minorca Eggs in one hundred lots for incubator use. Other varieties can only be supplied in limited numbers.

condition. Same description nearly applies to third, same winner.

Fourth, exhibited by Elm Poultry Yards, was almost a duplicate of first, having the fine color of first, but materially lacking in tail carriage. Fifth and sixth, same owner, were two superb pullets, of the type of first and fourth, one of these especially, with more age, is due to make an exceptional bird.

Among the Rose Comb Whites the first cock, owned by Snow Flake Farm, and second, owned by E. L. Hixie, were two males of very fair quality. First hen, owned by Snow Flake Farm, second, owned by Hoxie, and third, owned by Chas. F. Thompson, may be given some description as cocks. First cockerel, shown by C. F. Ensign, was an easy pick; second, owned by Richard Bank Poultry Farm; third, owned by Snow Flake; fourth, owned by Thompson, and fifth, owned by Hoxie, in quality came in order named.

First pullets, owned by Snow Flake Farm, while a little behind second and third in finish, was an easy winner when color was taken into consideration. Second, shown by Hoxie, was a beautifully finished pullet. Third, belonging to Ensign, was of the same description, but rather short in tail. Fourth, belonging to Richard Bank Farm, was plainly out of condition, being very pale.

The Single Comb Buff Leghorns averaged six or seven to the class, but were extremely unsatisfactory to judge, owing to the bad light, due to a rainy day, and the fact that some birds had not yet arrived, and did not arrive until judging was over. This left some good birds unplaced.

Any other variety Leghorn brought out in the cockerel class two exceptional Silver Duckwing cockerels for first and second place. In the pullet class the star was a Single Comb Black, owner, A. J. Davis. W. Theo. Wittman.

Polish at Boston

Buff Laced Polish were a splendid lot; in fine fettle, well groomed, and sound in color and markings. Bearded Silvers were few in number, but away up in quality, females being clear and free from massing. Plain Silvers had but one pair entered, but they were equal to Bearded ones in color and markings, although crests were not so good.

Bearded Goldens were represented by three cocks, one hen, three cockerels, and three pullets.

The first cock was the finest laced and colored bird the writer ever saw. Clear, and free fom white in wings, and laced even on fluff, with hackle back, and saddle one even shade of rich mahogany golden. Tail was of good color and well laced. The chief faults were a large comb and poor crests, evidently picked out by hens. Also the general shape of the bird was poor. Second cock was a showy bird, but lacks in lacings, and has white in wings and tail, but has splendid crest. Third cock had very stylish, fine shape, but was poor in color, white being even in secondaries, and tail half white. First hen was a splendid pattern in lacings and color and shape. Cockerels were a fair lot, free from white, and the pullets were of the same character.

Plain goldens brought out ten birds, all of splendid quality. First cock was a wonder in color, shape, and markings. First hen was also hard to beat. The cockerels and pullets were small and immature, but good.

Bearded Whites were a fine, well crested and bearded lot, with color quite free from brass or cream. Plain Whites were also fine. First cock and first hen being away ahead of class in color and shape.

White Crested Black Polish had an entry of five cocks, four hens, three cockerels, and three pullets, and made up a cracker jack class. First cock was a splendid type, clear white crest, sound color, and free from gray in flight. Second cock was best colored bird of lot, but fails in crest, and has gray in flight. Third cock had grand shape, but fails in heavy yellow crest. Gray in flights, and purple barring. First hen was very fine, large, well shaped, crest somewhat loose, but white. Second hen followed close, but crest color was not so good. First cockerel was quite free from purple barring and gray tips, snow white crest somewhat flat, poor in shape of tail, otherwise good. Second cockerel of fine shape and carriage, loses in color, crest being nearly yellow, wings showing gray on tips and at butt of primaries, and plumage full of purple barring. First pullet was very fine, but second immature. One exhibition pen of Plain Goldens and two Blue Polish hens made up the Polish exhibit.—W. H. Card.

Diamond State Poultry and Pet Stock Association

The first annual show of the Diamond State Poultry and Pet Stock Association held at Wilmington, Delaware, January 9th to 13th inclusive, was in all respects a great success; the entries numbered over 700, which was all the Hall could accommodate, with any degree of comfort to the visitors.

The show was cooped by the Spratts Patent Co., enough in itself to insure a uniform appearance and comfort and healthy condition for the exhibitors.

Mr. Norris G. Temple, the Superintendent, deserves much credit for the perfect arrangement and classification of the exhibits and his promptness in having everything in readiness for the judges to begin their work at nine o'clock a. m. the 9th. Judging was completed at five p. m., and as far as we could understand, gave entire satisfaction to the many exhibitors. The officers vie with each other in their efforts to please not only exhibitors and judges, but the visitors also.

Tuesday evening the officers of the Association invited the judges, exhibitors and members of the press to a banquet, at which about forty were present. This was indeed a most enjoyable meeting, as such gatherings on like occasions always are, as they bring into closer social relations the officers and exhibitors.

The dinner was quite an elaborate one of many courses, with the best of service, and seemed to be much enjoyed by all; not one regretting the absence of all drinks but water and coffee. The two hours spent here will surely remain a pleasant remembrance of this the first show of the Association with all who had the good fortune to be present.

We learned on the closing day that the attendance had been most satisfactory, and that in all ways the exhibition had been a perfect success, assuring future shows on more liberal lines than at this first show were believed would be possible. The Judges were, J. D. Nevius and Louis P. Graham.

Following is the list of awards:

Reorganization of Waterfowl Club of America

Fully realizing the seeming disrepute into which the Club had fallen, the poor showing of waterfowls at Madison Square Garden and the grand possibilities of a fully organized hard working club, the leading waterfowl men met in the committee room of the Garden at New York, on Saturday evening, Jan. 6th, 1906, and unanimously decided by actions and offers to make the Club worthy of the name. Business principles are to be in vogue. Every breeder of waterfowls is to be urged to become a member. Illustrated articles prepared by experts are to be furnished to the press. In fact no longer shall the geese and ducks be relegated to the rear of halls, neglected both in regard to premiums and proper attention. These are a few of the mental resolutions made by the various gentlemen, who have awakened at last to the absolute necessity of more specials; encouragement to the amateur breeder, and a better display at the leading shows. East state with ten or more members is to have a vice-president, and to have club specials offered at a show each year. Fellow breeders, why not you try to make up that list of ten? Are your interests not worthy of the efforts? Every show held in your state means more trade for you, and means new members for a club which should be numbered by hundreds. Join the club. Let us have an early enrollment from every state. Competent men have been selected as judges. The following gentlemen have been selected for officers for 1906: Mr. Clarence King, Romulus, New York, President; Charles McClave, New London, Ohio, Vice-President; M. F. Delano, Vineyard Haven, Mass., Treasurer. Dues, $1.00 per year. Address your applications for membership to C. J. Ross, Secretary, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

American Orpington Club

At the meeting of the American Orpington Club at New York during the show week, William Barry Owen, Vineyard Haven, Mass., was elected secretary. All who are interested in Orpingtons are invited to correspond freely and apply for membership. All interested in this breed are promised hard work by the secretary to make this one of the largest and most substantial clubs in the country, and great effort will be made to offer challenge cups and numerous prizes to members of the club.

Chicken House Rations

Many make the mistake of thinking that any kind of stones will "do" for hens. There is where they are getting dearly bought experience. Experienced poultrymen all over the country are finding that Mico Spar Cubical Grit makes an ideal grinder for hens and chickens. Mico Spar Cubical Grit never loses its sharp edges till all dissolved; it prepares the tough portions of food for digestion and assimilation; it helps to make hardy, healthy, happy hens. Mico Spar Grit is never lost in the litter, because it shines and sparkles. Hens see it easily and choose it in preference to other grit. Consequently not an ounce is wasted. It contains all the elements for flesh and egg building; lime, soda, aliminum, magnesia for shell, and iron for yolk. The International Mineral Co., Boston, Mass 120 Tremont Street, sell Mico Spar in pound bags for a cent a pound. Dealers and poultry supply houses have it. The free circular answers your questions.

Cook's Game Bantams

are still adding to their unprecedented show record of last season. At Providence my Black Reds not only took every first, but won three gold specials for best Game Bantam cock, best cockerel, and best pullet. At Woonsocket, in very strong competition, took three firsts, and gold special for best Game Bantam in show. And better still, these winners of gold specials were all bred in Slatersville. Also have a nice lot of Pyles and Birchens that are not far behind. Look up the awards at Providence and Woonsocket and see. May show elsewhere later. Shall have a few at Boston, all but one bred by myself. Watch the Awards.

Superb Winning Pigmy Pouters

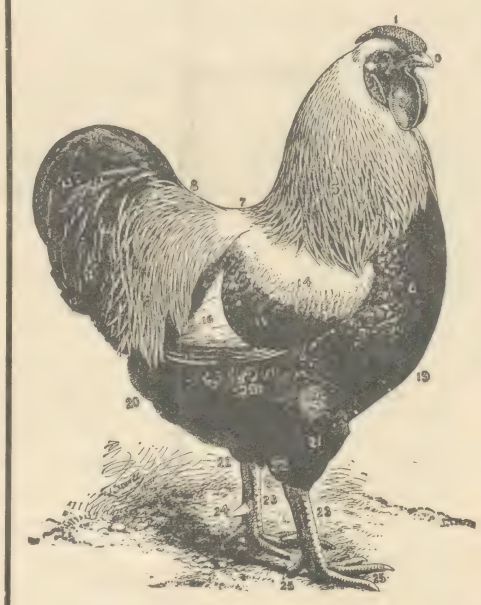
Great Madison Square Show.

HERE'S A RECORD TO BE PROUD of. At the Great New York Show, held in Madison Square Garden, January 2–6, 1906, on 24 entries, we won 24 premiums as follows: Eleven firsts, 10 seconds, and 3 thirds. It is evident that this GREAT RECORD is a world breaker. It is a case of where blood will tell. We have all blue-blooded birds in our Lofts.

At the last Great Hagerstown Show, the Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts, on twenty-four entries, were awarded 10 firsts (out of a possible 11 firsts, 5 seconds, 2 thirds, 3 fourths, 3 fifths, and special for best bird in show.

All Bred in Line from the Finest American and English Winners.



We have a few fine Breeders for sale which should breed you winners of "the blue" in any show. This opportunity won't last forever as our stock for sale is limited, the first come, first served.

The quality is here. The opportunity for such purchase does not often present itself.

I Have No Other Breeds

My strain again for the 6th consecutive year shows its superiority by winning more prizes at Madison Square Garden, New York, in the strongest competition ever known, than all others combined, including 17 specials, and again winning the National S. C. W. Leghorn silver cup. Two weeks later I almost duplicated my wonderful win of last year at Boston by winning 9 prizes on 9 entries against the most prominent breeders of the east. My winnings for 1906 at the world's two greatest shows are as follows:

BOSTON.	NEW YORK.
Pen, 1st.	Pen, 4th.
Pullets, 2nd, 3rd.	Pullets, 1st, 2nd, 5th.
Hens, 1st, 4th.	Hens, 2nd.
Cockerels, 1st, 2nd.	Cockerels, 1st, 4th.
Cocks, 1st, 2nd.	Cocks, 1st, 3rd, 4th.

FOR POULTRY

Fowls give best returns when their feed is appetizing and contains the materials required for the vital and productive processes. One-half the solid matter in the fowl's body and over one-half the solids in an egg consist of protein. One-twelfth of the solid matter in the fowl's body and over one-third of the egg is mineral matter. These substances are necessary for making blood, bone, flesh, feathers and both the shell and its contents. Food supplying protein and mineral matter and productive, that's why Cottrell's Alfalfa Meal is an excellent poultry food. It is rich in mineral matter and protein which it contains in an easily digestible form. It contains 50 per cent more egg-making material and supplies the food elements which ordinary grains lack. Cottrell's Alfalfa Meal provides green feed the year 'round and gives grass conditions in mid-winter. It aids digestion, promotes vigorous growth, improves the quality of the eggs and imparts delicate flavor to the flesh. It's worth dollars to the poultryman. If your dealer cannot supply you, write to us direct. 100 lb. sack, $1.50; 500 lbs., $6.00 f. o. b. Elgin. Write for free circular.

Makes Fowls Healthy

Editorial Gossip

Messrs. Lentz & Enders, Elizabethville, Pa., are anxious to communicate with someone who thoroughly understands the poultry business, who has a little money to put up against their thirty-seven acre tract of land, to handle and grow exhibition and market poultry.

The reports that come to us from the meeting of the American Poultry Association at Cincinnati would indicate that everything was harmonious and that considerable business was transacted that must prove of future benefit to the association. As indicated in the columns of our previous edition, Mr. Curtis was elected president and Mr. Orr re-elected secretary-treasurer. The long list of amendments proposed to the constitution was turned aside for those adopted, as presented in our short report from the meeting.

At this time we shall only say that we trust that there will be a change for improvement in the management of the association. We do not belong to that portion of the fancy who seem to think that the association has degenerated. All great bodies must go through a series of changes after a storm. The publishing of the new Standard and the new organization should settle all contention and trouble, and the future of the association should mean good for all concerned.

After a reasonable time has elapsed and a proper moment presents itself for the careful consideration of all that was done at Cincinnati, we may have some thing to say that will interest our readers and perhaps benefit the association. But we shall not take up or be party to any contentions except when we feel assured, as we did during the past nine months, that proper presentations of wrongs would help at least to bring about the changes that must prove beneficial in the future. We do not care to join the class of "I told you so's" or take any undue credit for anything that may have happened. We have tried to be on the side of right and improvement, and hope to continue in line with the same.

There are other matters of far greater interest in the present condition of poultry than to go over the happenings of a convention so recently adjourned. The fanciers, the utility breeders, the farmers and the small town lot poultry-men are now all industriously engaged in the selection of hatching machinery, mating their pens, preparing for the spring work of producing the many millions of market poultry and the thousands of exhibition specimens to be used in their several ways during the rest of the winter.

We have visited recently some of the largest producing and selling centers of the country. On all sides in ready response to the question of supply and demand, comes the answer there has not been enough of the better qualities to supply the urgent demands.

Fresh laid eggs and high class market poultry of all kinds have sold, we presume, during the last few months higher than ever before. The open winter has not benefited the cold storage proposition. Whenever the hens do their duty cold storage problems are not profitable. At the same time, they are a necessity for the welfare of the community and should be encouraged.

This leads us to again consider the proposition heralded abroad of presenting laws in the several states of the country forbidding the sale of undrawn dressed poultry. An effort is being made in some directions to compel all poultry offered for sale to be drawn, completely dressed, head and shanks severed from the body and the poultry thus drawn, with the giblets, to be offered for sale. The sale of poultry in an undrawn condition is to be discontinued.

If this law should ever come into effect, it would almost ruin the dressed poultry trade of this country. The careful way that poultry is killed at the present time, and the means applied for preserving same make it possible for undrawn poultry to be kept almost an unlimited period if properly preserved in cold storage. On the other hand, if poultry must be drawn before being shipped and offered for sale, the greater portion of all shipped would be destroyed before it reached its destintion.

American bred poultry has become the standard for dressed poultry all over the world. It is shipped from the large finishing establishments of the west into every land where American products are sold. This makes possible a large, profitable business to the growers of poultry all over the United States. If once the law were changed as some desire, this industry would be destroyed and the only means of selling poultry would be to ship it alive to the destination, where the greater portion of it would be offered on the market at a sacrifice greater than any one can imagine.

There is quite an opening up of the poultry industry throughout the South. In many localities small exclusive plants are being established, while in a few some plants of considerable proportion are nearly completed. The south might become the producing portion of the country for fresh laid eggs during the winter months. With less accommodations as to buildings, and with a less outlay for their care and comfort, poultry and eggs could be produced and sold at a profit at a price within a few cents of the amount asked for storage products. This is a large country, and presents many opportunities for all these purposes.

The demand for water fowl has greatly increased within two years. The demand for ducks is reasonably well met by the large duck farms scattered over the country. There is not a sufficient number of geese grown to meet the market demand. Thousands of them during the past winter have been shipped in from Nova Scotia and other localities. The cultivation of geese can be readily carried on in almost every locality where farming is in vogue. Geese are easily grown, cared for and readily marketed at fairly good prices.

There have been several systems presented of late for the selection of the best laying hens, the trap nests, the scientific system, the Hogan system and the Potter system having all had due consideration in the columns of the poultry journals. The way to succeed is to be thoroughly well acquainted with the best egg producers, so as to gather and hatch from them alone the eggs they produce for the up-building of a better laying strain the coming winter.

The Australian people are paying a lot of attention to the producing of laying hens and laying ducks as well. We might better pay more attention to this, both with hens and ducks, for every ten per cent of increase in the egg yield adds ten per cent to the total product, and ten per cent of the present product would be more than one hundred thousand added to the present production.

Soon the Government of the United States will be considering the proposition of the next census. Now is the time for those who are interested in poultry to begin laying the ground work for a more efficient taking of the census on all kinds of poultry products.

It would be a good work for the American Poultry Association to take up and formulate the plans of census taking that would prove conclusively the value of this interest to the country. There are people connected with the Agriculture Department who believe that not one-half of the total product of this country has ever been reported in the census. We are very much of the same opinion and think the time is ripe for the American Poultry Association to take hold of this work and do something that may prove of great benefit to the fancy.

It is gratifying to state that Mr. Chas. H. Brundage, of Danbury, Connecticut, the successful producer of the beautiful Golden Wyandottes, won the special of a one hundred dollar cup for best cock, hen, cockerel and pullet of all varieties of Wwandottes at the New York Show. When a man has the ability to produce four Golden Wyandottes with quality enough to win the cup over all other varieties, he surely has accomplished something worthy of a true fancier. We gladly congratulate Mr. Brundage on this unusual success.

The above reminds us that it is pertinent to state that the Golden Laced Wyandottes have gone rapidly forward in the last two years. Males and females of better quality than ever shown in the Laced Wyandottes have come to the front in this variety. Why the Silvers cannot improve the top color and finish of the males we are at a loss to understand. They do produce most beautiful Silver Wyandotte females. Males of equal quality are rather scarce.

For years there has not been the interest shown in Dorkings that was shown at Boston and New York. More good Dorkings came to the front at these two shows than one has met with in several seasons before, and the quality of the Black Spanish and Leghorns would gratify the aspirations of the most enthusiastic fanciers.

We have the following communication from Hazelmere Poultry Yards, Knightsville, Cranston, R. I.: "We hold to the order of the owner a Rose Comb Red Cockerel, band No. 25, that was returned with our birds from the Chicago Show."

The Pittsburgh Show is off, owing to the burning of the famous old City Hall building and market. No other hall being available the management was compelled to give up holding a show this year. The Smoky City always wound up the show season in a blaze of glory and many fanciers will miss the show and good times there.

The death of Mr. Lewis Wright, the well known English poultry writer, was a particularly sad one. Mr. Wright was the author of one of the best poultry books ever printed, in fact, it was the standard work for years, and to-day, as we glance over its pages, we find many interesting facts, tersely and clearly written. The author was not only a good poultryman but a master of good English of the kind that plain everyday people could understand.

The Newark Show closed last week and beat all previous records, the entries being larger and the quality of the birds better. It was finely managed by that pastmaster of the art, Mr. T. Farner Rockham, cooping and feeding being his particular specialty. But his executive ability as secretary counted for much more and everything moved along like a well oiled piece of machinery.

The Hon. Signor Martini Sparks was an able assistant to "Uncle Tom" Rockham and did business and social stunts that no other man could do as gracefully and satisfactorily. The Signor had a few White Wyandottes on exhibition that made a bit more history for the Belle of Cape May Strain.

It is a pleasure to state all the other officers of the Newark Show were willing workers and helped to make things pleasant for all visiting fanciers. The attendance was enormous and many good sales were made.

The Asiatic classes were, as usual, weak in numbers, but made up in quality what they lacked in quantity, notably in the Light Brahma division.

Plymouth Rocks made up grand classes, Barred Rock cocks and hens being above the average in quality. Cockerels were strong, notably first, a beautiful bird in color, barring and type, with other winners close up. The pullet class was the best we have handled this season, the first being almost an ideal Rock, grand in color, with even parallel barring, and fine in shape and type. There were a dozen or more good ones, good enough to show at New York or Boston. White Rocks had big classes full of quality, as might be expected when Peapack Farm, Wilson and Ortell, Purple and others show. First cock, hen, pen and pullet were shows in the White Rock alley, while the winning Cockerels were a show by themselves. As a whole they were a grand lot of birds. Buff Rocks had small but good classes.

Wyandottes led off with a small but very select class of Silvers and furnished a surprise in a cockerel that is easily the find of the season. Dr. Beckett sprung this surprise and what is most gratifying to him, is the fact that the bird has been bred in line, from a fine lot of ancestors, the grand dam being the famous "Ada Rehan," one of the finest Silver Wyandotte hens ever shown in America. This cockerel is absolutely sound in lacing of breast and body, no edging or frosting being noticeable; neck and back well striped, free from mossing; wings excellent, the bars especially so; flights true in color. In type and comb the bird is a Wyandotte all over. The other Silvers were first-class in every way. Only a few Golden and Buffs were shown, but they were good ones. Partridge Wyandottes were strong in numbers and very good in quality. White Wyandottes also had large classes with plenty of quality, notably first cock, a grand big white bird of good type, closely followed by second, not in as good feather. Hens were strong in quality, first winning on type and condition over second and third, both of which were fine ones. Cockerels were a goodly bunch, but some lacking in development of breast and body, showing too much legginess for modern type of Wyandotte. The winners were fine specimens in color and in several instance good in shape. Pullets were a very strong and good class, first being a beauty in type and color. Pens were a grand lot, first consisting of as even a bunch of white and well shaped birds as we have seen this season with several very close up. It was a pity that this fine exhibit of White Wyandottes was cooped in a dark part of the hall.

Leghorns had strong classes, the Single Combed Browns being about the best lot we have seen or handled this season. The competition was very keen especially in cockerels and pullets, many noted winners being in the race. First cockerel was a fine one in type with a beautiful hackle and saddle, color and striping being equally good in each section. He was a picture. Second was another grand bird, failing but a trifle in color to winner. The other winners were strictly high class. Pullets were a splendid lot, first being grand in shape, fine in head points and with the most even and correct surface color we ever saw in a Brown Leghorn, and the second was so very close to her that we were compelled to take some time to decide the award. The third was in the same class as to quality, in fact all the winners were stars. Although we did not handle the cocks and hens, the winners looked to us as being far above the average. The first pen was a dream of Browns. Rose Combed Browns had but a small class, but were very good in quality. White Leghorns were a very fine lot as a rule, but not as numerous as our Jersey fanciers can produce. The Mosquito State is the home of the Leghorn and we should like to have seen about several hundred Whites. Get a move on, boys. The Buffs were strictly "bred in the purple" and full of quality. There were some very fine Silver Duckwing Leghorns shown by Exmoor Farm.

Only a few Minorcas were exhibited, we are sorry to state, but they were good ones. Andalusians were a good lot. There was a good display of Rhode Island Reds. Hamburgs and Polish did not fill except in a few classes.

Orpingtons made quite a showing thanks to Willow Brook Farm and Mr. Megorgee, who sent full strings. The quality was excellent all along the line. The master of Willow Brook Farm has evidently frightened some of his competitors on Buffs, Blacks and Whites for we missed the exhibits of some of our Jersey friends at Newark.

We are glad that Mr. George B. Inches sent a string of fine Dorkings to Newark and saved this fine race of fowl from being unrepresented.

There was a fine display of Indian Games, Exmoor Farms showing a great string.

The Ornamental Bantams while fine in quality should have been larger in quantity in some classes as this is a Bantam section. Somebody had better start up breeding Silver Sebrights and Rose Combed Blacks again. Game Bantams were a fine lot, the Black Reds being quite warm classes. The pigeon classes were remarkably small but there was quality enough to make up for the lack of interest taken by pigeon fanciers in a show of such importance as Newark.

The Newark Show proved a financial success, and if a show can be held where no admission is charged to the public, there must be something in the management to bring about such results and that is why we take pleasure in complimenting Mr. Rockham and his able brother officers in doing what few shows can do. This show is an educator, not only for the fancies but for the many new beginners who get their first inspiration at a function of this kind.

It is most desirable in poultry keeping to renew the vigor of the stock by the introduction of new blood every season. First, select some standard-bred variety, keep them pure and true, and add to the flock every season a sufficient number of male members of strong constitution to keep up the vigor of the flock. On the other hand, when breeding for exhibition purposes, you must line breed, inbreed, and select the finest specimens. The only way to build up form and feather to the highest degree of exhibition perfection, is to line breed your stock. The best way to have the largest egg-producing hens and the most healthy, vigorous market poultry, is to constantly introduce new blood.

Nothing is so detrimental to the stock as to permit the chickens, ducks, geese and turkeys to run together. No one has or ever will prosper in poultry keeping that follows this plan. Better keep only one kind, unless you can keep them separated.

We have the following information from a party who claims to have kept something over a hundred hens last winter. The entire lot were fed on nothing but cracked corn and beef scrap. Both of these foods were fed in hoppers. The poultry were allowed to help themelves, and they made a large profit for their owner, through the production of fresh-laid eggs throughout the winter. Here is a case where self-feeding was profitable in the production of eggs.

We copy the following from the New York Agriculturist relative to the marketing of crate-fattened poultry. This is the answer of one of the handlers in New York in reply to a question propounded to them as to the value of crate-fattened poultry: "We believe New York is not using as much crate fed poultry as a few years ago, when this was considered a fad. This is probably because the stock will not hold up like ordinarily fed stock. It is soft, the other is hard. When frozen it comes out in bad shape. Evidently the milk will sour the flesh to a certain extent, and this gives the chicken a peculiar taste. The system is all right, but a different feed should be used. Only men who have large coolers are feeding stock in this way. Farmers do very little.—E. S. A." Crate fattening has increased very much, and is growing fast. Many large stations are being erected where poultry is naturally thick and are doing the community much good. The demand increases with the supply. There is more or less poor stock, even among this crate-fattened poultry: hence, the disrepute some of it has brought upon the class. Ordinary poultry looks thin beside crate-fattened, and is more difficult to dispose of at satisfactory prices. The demand for all poultry is for first-class stock, and it will pay all farmers to take proper care in feeding now, in order to receive good returns. Notwithstanding the above statement, we are fully satisfied that a greater profit can be made at all times from properly fattened poultry than can ever be made through the sending it to market in an unattractive, unfinished condition.

Another writer in the "Florida Agriculturist" scores the writers on this subject, and tells them that they should use dry feed and alternate males in their breeding pen; that all these statements are made without having been thoroughly tried and considered; and while some have thought that they have gained some little advantage thereby, one would think that the writers of these articles had lost sight of the fact that Nature's laws applied more strongly and more absolutely to the female than to the male, and that they can not under any conditions whatever, change the laws and rules governing these matters; that they should remember and always consider that the real and final settlement of this condition rested entirely with the hens that produced the eggs, and that there can not, through any forced conditions or unreasonable changes, be brought about conditions that do not conform absolutely with the laws and rulings of Nature, which creates and absolutely governs the results in all these matters.

At Boston and New York were large collections of pigeons for growing squabs. Runts, Continentals, half bred and true bred Homers, larger and heavier than have been usually seen were offered for this purpose. The price of some of these squab growing pigeons reached from twenty-five to thirty dollars a pair. While no one could afford to stock a loft with such expensive breeders, a pair or two might be purchased and experimented with, and in a year or two produce for their owners fifty to one hundred pair that would cost simply the original outlay and the care and expense of growing them. This is the way to venture into the production of the higher priced European bred specimens or heavier weight squab producers.

GROWING BANTAMS

It is not much more difficult to grow bantams than other chickens providing we stop to consider that they are so much smaller and more delicate than many of the other breeds or varieties. If we will always select to hatch the eggs some nice little Cochin Bantams, no matter whether of a high quality or not, we can be sure of the most perfect little mother-hen. We read an article from a northwestern agricultural writer a short time since, in which he stated that he had tried for two years to discover of what value a Cochin Bantam could be, and he had finally learned that she was the most valuable of all mother-hens, that she would successfully hatch and raise every kind of a feathered fowl from an egg of her own kind or from any chicken or turkey as well.

There is no possible chance for an argument as to the value of the Cochin hen as a mother-hen for bantams. If the greatest of pains is taken to thoroughly dust her body and plumage twice or thrice each week during incubation with Persian insect-powder, beginning three or four days prior to the time of the hatching, you can almost positively guarantee against much trouble with insect vermin.

As soon as the little bantams are hatched and ready to leave the nest, take some sweet oil and with the finger thoroughly grease the top of the head so as to be absolutely certain that there are no head-lice present. Wherever there is any indication of them, thoroughly grease them under the throat in the same manner. Place the mother-hen with the little bantams in a nice, dry, clean coop with a board floor and a little chaff for the litter scattered over same. It is not necessary to give them any food until past twenty-four hours old. Let the first food be of bread-crumbs, dry and scattered for them to eat. Feed them this at least five times a day for the first two days. Then add to the bread-crumbs a little very small oatmeal. Let the bread-crumbs and oatmeal furnish their diet for three or four days. Then begin to feed more oatmeal than bread-crumbs, and finally add to this some small broken wheat. As they grow large feed nothing but oats and wheat, broken small as long as necessary, and as soon as they are able to eat whole wheat and hulled oats, feed them this. You will find that they will thrive as well as will other chicks.

There are some chick foods made that are small enough and most valuable for growing little bantams. This will prove to be of the greatest value in growing the bantams. Do not feed them any mash food or wet food of any kind. It is better to feed them a small amount of grain. Do not give any kind of food to young bantams that is apt to make them grow too large or too fast. After the bantams are a few weeks old they will often fatten really more than will the large breeds or varieties. They seem to have good constitutional power and are very vigorous, but nothing is so destructive or so certain of exterminating a lot of bantams as is continual wet or damp in their quarters or the presence of insect vermin.

We have the sad recollections of being called to visit a friend who had a most promising flock of seventy young bantams just coming three weeks old. He wished to know what was the matter with them. We soon discovered that they were infested with lice. Everything that could possibly be done for them was tried, but inside of forty-eight hours came a long continued wet spell, and the presence of the lice had so reduced their vitality that they were unable to withstand continued wet and damp weather for a week or more, and on our next visit, there were but six or seven left. At the same time and in the same neighborhood was another lot of somewhere near a hundred that had been properly cared for from the very start, less than a dozen of which died during the same wet spell.

This is a living illustration of what may be expected from cleanliness and good care with bantams and what is certain to come through carelessness and improper care. The little bantam will get along equally as well as the chicks of the large varieties providing they are properly cared for. The only rule for the proper growing of bantams is to provide against the insect pest and the influence of wet or damp surroundings and give them proper care and feeding. They do not need to be coddled or kept warm by artificial means, simply provide for them a comfortable, dry place to stay and feed them good, wholesome food and protect them from insect vermin. They will grow surprisingly fast and mature much sooner than might be expected.

It is true that the little bantam chicks are more delicate when first hatched than are the large kinds, but in a very few days, if properly cared for, they will pick up and become very spry and run about just as quickly and just as much as will the chicks of the larger fowls. It is simply necessary to apply the same rules of care and feeding to the growing of the little bantams as must be given to the successful growing of the chicks of larger fowls, and you will succeed remarkably well with all of them.

Cause of Diseases

We clip the following from "Farm Stock Journal", knowing its value to our readers. Avoid the causes of disease, and you will be more successful.

The most troublesome diseases of fowl, with their causes, may be summed up as follows:

Roup.—Planted by "only a neglected slight cold."

Cholera.—Caused principally by overcrowding.

Diarrhoea.—Damp houses, filthy houses and runs, and bad feeding.

Canker.—Dampness and filth.

Diphtheria.—Roosting in draughts, damp houses.

Ulcerated throat.—Ditto.

Consumption.—Neglected cold.

Apoplexy, vertigo and epilepsy.—Overfeeding.

Sore eyes.—Damp houses.

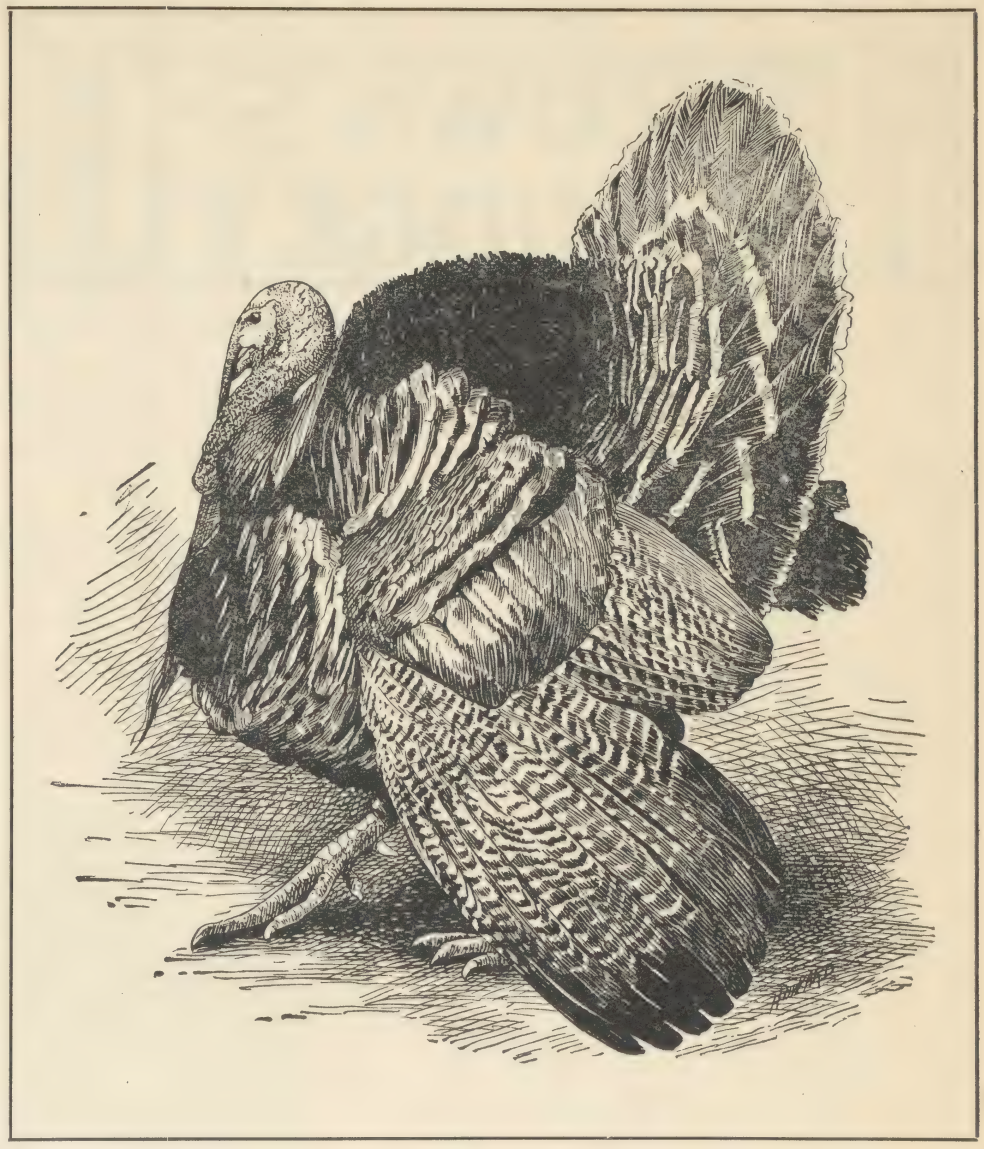
Costiveness and constipation.—Improper food..

Soft and swelled crops, indigestion and dyspepsia.—Overfeeding.

Pip and bronchitis.—Damp quarters.

Black rot.—Result of indigestion.

Soft eggs.—Overfeeding.



Gout, rheumatism and cramp.—Damp houses.

Leg weakness.—Inbreeding and overfeeding.

Bumble foot.—High perches.

Scaly legs and chicken pox.—Filthy and damp quarters.

Above all things never feed your poultry mouldy or tainted food of any kind. Nothing is so susceptible to the influence of unwholesome food as are eggs. Bad flavored food or water will taint them.

BRONZE TURKEY COCK

Buff Plymouths at New York

The Buff Rock class was one of the largest ever seen at New York, and by far the best. Fifteen cocks were entered. First was a nice, large, even colored bird, with very good head points, quite large for a Rock, and has a tendency to Orpington type. Second had better color and type than first, but was not so large. Third, fourth and fifth were all fine ones, with some mighty nice birds left out. Hens were seventeen in number. First, a large even colored hen, was too large, with a poor comb, and of Orpington type. Second was of better type, with nice comb and good even color. Third was another very fine hen, and fourth and fifth were also very good. No. 631, belonging to Hutchings, was the best colored hen in the class, with solid buff wings and tail, almost typical shape, best head of any female in the class, a little too blocky, but easily the best Buff Rock hen ever shown. Cockerels number thirty-five. First was a very even colored bird, good type, nice head, plenty of black in wings and tail and dark tail coverts.. Second was a nice large bird, comb a little large, but fine in every other way. Third, fourth and fifth were all very good birds.

Number 655 (unplaced), belonging to Owen Farms, was a beautiful bird, with solid buff wings and tail of fine type, even surface color, sound under color, and nice head points. This bird is without doubt the best Buff Rock male ever produced. Number 651 (unplaced), belonging to Pensyl, is another beautiful bird, nearly as good as number 655, and easily the second best bird in the class. Number 663 (unplaced), owned by Topham, is another fine bird, better than any of the winners except second. Pullets numbering thirty-three, were a very fine bunch. First was very even in color, and of nice type. Second, of good type and good, even color, had better wings and tail than first. Second, third and fourth were all good ones. We liked number 667, owned by Hutchings, and thought it deserved a place, having solid buff wings and tail, and fine in type. Pens numbering six were all nice. We rather fancied number 3450, belonging to Topham, should have a better place.—Andrew Riddell.

White Wyandottes — Cornish Indian Games

First and special pen, third pullet. That is our record on S. C. Buff Orpingtons at Madison Square Garden, Jan. 2-6, 1906. 1st, 2nd and 3rd on cock, hen, cockerel and pullet and 1st and 2nd pen. Also $25.00 silver cup for best display, all varieties competing, and seven other specials were awarded our Buff Orpingtons at Albany (64 Buffs competing). 2nd cock, 2nd and 3rd hen, 1st, 2nd and 3rd on cockerel and pullet, Cornish Indian Games, at the same show. 36 ribbons on 28 entries. Breeding stock for sale at reasonable prices. Eggs for hatching, $3.00 per 13, $5.00 per 26. Buff Orpington and Black Minorca Eggs in one hundred lots for incubator use. Other varieties can only be supplied in limited numbers.

BROWN'S BUDGET

The trouble department in the poultry business creates itself.

Common sense is an ingredient that can be mixed with any operation in poultry culture, without danger of spoiling things.

The chronic fault-finder always has a full stock on hand, and it is about all he ever does have.

A flock of pure bred fowls seem thoroughly in harmony with neat thrifty farm home surroundings. A motley flock of mongrels seem to mar the pleasing picture.

"Never mind the weather so the wind don't blow." The hens don't mind the cold if they can get out of the wind. Provide places of shelter for them.

What do the fowls in winter find picking among the dead grass? They seem to enjoy the picking, if it is a sort of dried ensilage provender. Fowls find much, and they seem to enjoy picking over the dried fodder that has been cut in short bits for the cows and horses.

Don't use the shatterings of the hay loft for anything in winter but the hens. The material is excellent for laying hens to scratch among and pick over. If there is many clover tops among the shatterings, it will pay to screen them out with a regular cinder screen, such as is used in sifting coal ashes.

Coal cinders make fine material to scatter around on the low places in the chicken yards, and around the poultry houses. Fowls also like to pick among fresh cinders.

The poultry breeders of Harford County, Maryland, will hold a poultry show in Belair, the county seat, on Friday and Saturday, February 16 and 17, 1906. Only entries from Harford County will be allowed in the competition, as it is a home show. The main object is to encourage the raising of pure breeds in the county. In the immediate vicinity of Belair there are many pure bred fowls of different varieties raised.

County poultry shows may be made the stepping stones to a big state show. It is also a good idea for helping the breeders, teaching them how to select their best birds for fairs and large poultry shows. All these displays should be judged by an expert, who should be willing to stay a day extra and explain differences between prize birds, etc.

The open winter and the well-cared for hens have "busted" one cold storage egg trust in the West, accomplishing more than the government can. It would be a good place—cold storage—to put all the bad trusts.

Chronic kickers at poultry shows are often indisputable evidence that the judge has done his duty fearlessly, honestly and correctly. The chronic kicker is more of a chronic bluffer than any thing else. The honest judge is ready and willing to correct an error or mistake, but he is sensibly, simply deaf to all bulldozing tactics.

Spasmodic efforts may start the germ of success, but the neglect that follows, never allows the germs to advance beyond the swelling or anticipating stage. Neglect is the frost that kills.

Criticism of the American Poultry Association without recommending something to improve the condition or troubles complained of, is merely dyspeptic scolding. It is not an evidence of greatness or superior wisdom, to attack institutions or methods of associations on mere suspicion. Where practical recommendations for betterment follows the criticisms have more weight.

"Can I start in poultry with ten thousand hens for eggs, and make money in the business?"—"John Gotrox."

Sure. That is with the same surety of success you would start in any other occupation you knew nothing about, at a point it requires others years to attain. You would have to "make money" to keep it going. Of course the business wouldn't stop going, if money supply ceased, but 'twouldn't be going the right way.

Better buy experience in smaller doses. Two hundred hens are better as a starter. The road to success is strewn with wrecks of those who started where they should have ended in the business.

New York, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati—pretty fair constellation of stars in the poultry firmament for an open winter, thank you, and the star gazer is looking for more.

In all sections and at all seasons eggs are cash bringers. This fact was literally illustrated by a five year old country girl. She went to the combination post office and store at the cross roads and placing two eggs on the counter lisped, "Ma thays she wanth two eggs worth of tea, and that the black hen is on the nest and the speckled pullet is too, and I'll be back thoon for two eggs worth of thugar."

A farmer was selling some eggs to a road hotel man. The price was forty cents a dozen, and there was one egg over four dozen. The farmer demanded three cents for the egg. Landlord wanted it "thrown in with the bargain." No. Finally the landlord said, "well, I'll take the egg and treat to a drink." All right, said the farmer. When asked what he would have he replied, "Well, I allus drink sherry with an egg in it." And then they say farmers buy gold bricks.

A man's good patience and humanity is a good indication of whether he is a genuine poultry fancier or not. When he imagines every dollar he spends for the feed or comfort of his flock is as big as the Ferris wheel, it is more a case of dyspepsia than chicken fever.

If you have any culls, don't be induced to sell them alive. No matter what the buyer promises he won't do with them, kill them before you sell. One live cull from your yard may cause you loss of trade. Dead culls bring only cash returns.

The open winter conditions have shown many farmers that if they provide comfortable hen houses, so their hens could in a sense be independent of the weather that winter egg product could readily be increased fifty per cent.

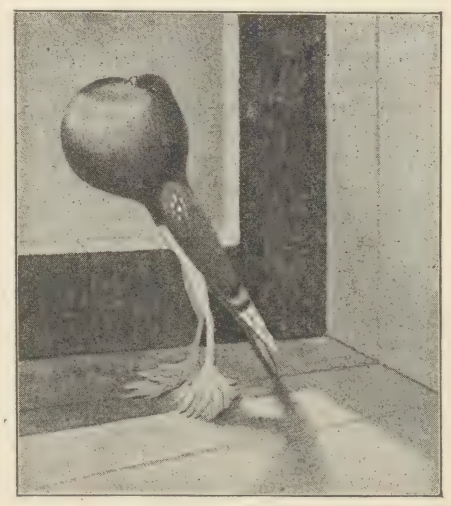
It's a cold day when the Canadians get get left. Up in that alleged cold climate they raise good poultry, and then come over to the "States" with specimens, and carry blue ribbons and American greenbacks home. That's all right, if they didn't have the goods they couldn't do it. The Government in Canada, on the Experimental Farm, for the past six or seven years has given considerable attention to poultry raising. It is claimed this work has enabled the Canadian farmer to get from $1 to $1.50 per pair for five months old chickens when properly fattened and dressed, instead of, as formerly, from 25c to 35c per pair at six months old. Wake up American farmers.

Scene in Farmer Toadpole's Poultry Yard. Old Hen, "You're putting on great airs since you came back from the show, but I didn't see any blue ribbon frills on your coop." Frisky Pullet, "No, I was decorated with the V. H. C. order." Old Hen (sarcastically), "Umph, s'pose you know that means 'very highly condemned.'" F. P., "I cackle ate you don't know what you're talking about, so there, now."

Old City Hall, the building in which the Pittsburg Fanciers Club have always held their annual show, was burned on Saturday, January 20th, 1906. As we are unable to secure another hall that is even half way suitable, we have decided to not hold a show this year, but hope events will shape themselves in such a way that we will be better able to do justice to exhibitors, visitors, and ourselves before next year.—G. C. Sutch, Secretary and Treasurer.

Poultry for Market

When dressing your poultry for market, if for local trade, presuming that it is plump and in good market condition, confine them over night in a coop. Do not feed in the morning; in fact, do not feed them again at all. Slaughter them about one o'clock in the day, clean and dress them, and put them in a cool cellar or milk house over night, so that all the animal heat may depart from the carcass. Deliver as early the following day as possible. Always sever the head, feet and shanks, and extract the entrails from dressed poultry to be sold to local trade at once.



If shipping, kill by sticking in the roof of the mouth, and hang them up by the feet to bleed, dry-pick as quickly as possible after sticking them. After perfectly free and clean from all the feathers, lay them away so as to permit all the animal heat to depart from the body. After this, pack them in barrels, line with nice clean paper, or in small boxes most convenient for the purpose. When the chickens are packed, turn the heads under the body, and pack them breast up. When necessary to ice them, put a layer of ice between every two layers of poultry. When not necessary to ice them, pack them very close in the barrel or box. Above all things, never use any dirty paper, nor straw of any kind in the packing of poultry. If you have a sufficient amount, grade them according to size. Pack all of one weight and size to one case; the smallest, if small enough, for broilers, in a case by themselves, marked broilers. The other sizes should be graded alike; all the heavy weights, all the medium weights, and all the light weights to themselves. The best way to pack is in square boxes, lined with parchment paper. Always place the stenciling on the top of the box, and mark very plainly, "This Side Up With Care. Open On Top." It it just as well to mark the number and weight in each box. If one hundred or two hundred pounds is packed in one box, and they are carefully packed, and but one cent per pound is gained from the nice appearance, the box is more than paid for, and a profit besides.

Every neighborhood should cultivate the presence of an honest buyer and collector of poultry. He should be encouraged in the business. More in quality and quantity should be brought to him

Superb Winning Pigmy Pouters

Great Madison Square Show.

HERE'S A RECORD TO BE PROUD of. At the Great New York Show, held in Madison Square Garden, January 2–6, 1906, on 24 entries, we won 24 premiums as follows: Eleven firsts, 10 seconds, and 3 thirds. It is evident that this GREAT RECORD is a world breaker. It is a case of where blood will tell. We have all blue-blooded birds in our Lofts.

At the last Great Hagerstown Show, the Potomac Pigmy Pouter Lofts, on twenty-four entries, were awarded 10 firsts (out of a possible 11 firsts, 5 seconds, 2 thirds, 3 fourths, 3 fifths, and special for best bird in show.

All Bred in Line from the Finest American and English Winners.

We have a few fine Breeders for sale, which should breed you winners of "the blue" in any show. This opportunity won't last forever as our stock for sale is limited, the first come, first served.

ntinually. When he can do a good business at a good profit, he can afford to pay more for the poultry than any one could gain from killing and shipping same themselves. For the commission merchant we are pleased to say that a friend of ours has shipped this winter squabs, eggs, and dressed poultry to twenty-seven dealers in New York, Boston, and one other local city. In every instance his poultry, squabs, and eggs have been accepted as graded by him, and the highest prices promptly returned. Some of the best qualities, shipped in another name from the same point, brought the same results. Every time a mixed lot was sent, the grading was very disappointing. This shows that the commission merchant will always do the best for his customer, but the shipper must help himself by sending his stock to market in the most resentable condition.

Recent visits to the egg-handlers of large cities has proven beyond peradventure the value of the proper grading and packing of eggs. In every instance where a mixed lot is sent to market, unprofitable returns is the result. Whenever high quality stock, nicely selected, and nicely packed reaches the market, they sell at a profit. From one locality in Connecticut a few weeks ago we expressed several shipments, one of which brought thirty-two cents per dozen for the eggs, all the balance nineteen cents. Those that sold at thirty-two cents were nicely graded, smooth, regular colored eggs; the others were mixed all kinds, sizes, shapes and colors. It pays to select and pack your shipments.

Turkey Growing

Many years ago the white turkey was considered a novelty. They were, however, considerably bred until their constitution was thoroughly undermined through careless methods of 'inbreeding. Following this, there came a revival of the White Holland, the result of the infusion of the invigorating blood of the white sports from the Bronze or Narragansetts varieties. We have seen at several of the fall fairs this season some grand, noble specimens of the Holland Turkeys. While the shanks lacked somewhat the beautiful pinkish tinge that naturally belongs to them, the size and vigor more than overcome these defects, and added so much to the real value as table poultry of the Holland turkey, that we could not even express a regret that the shanks were not quite so attractive. Formerly from nine to twelve pounds for hens and from twelve to sixteen pounds for toms were the average of the White Holland. Of late we have observed some where the hens ranged from sixteen to twenty, and the toms from twenty-four to thirty pounds. This is a pleasing improvement in the Hollands, one of the most desirable of all market turkeys.

The growing of turkeys has been very largely taken up by women through Kentucky, Texas and Missouri. No one seems to be more successful with them than the women who understand and that are willing to work for success with them. One of these successful women in Indiana recommends the Bourbon Reds. The Bourbon Reds are a large and vigorous domestic fowl that are said to have had their origin in the mountains of Kentucky. Some claim them to have been indigent to that locality. We have been unable to substantiate this from the records of any naturalist familiar with the turkeys of this country. We are led to believe from appearances and what we know of them, that they are the outcome of a cross of the Bronze and Buff turkeys made in the mountain districts of Kentucky, and grown there in a semi-wild condition. However this may be, we have seen some of the Bourbon Reds of great size and vigor, and we believe that they might be profitably used in some localities to improve the stamina and size of the buff turkeys. In reading a short time ago of turkey growing in California, we notice that in some localities they are herded, the same as cattle, the owners or attendants following the turkeys about upon the backs of ponies, and guiding their wanderings so as to keep them from straying too far from home and becoming wild or undomestic. There are many localities throughout all our Southern states where turkey growing could be very largely carried on. There are thousands of acres of waste land in almost every state in the Union that could be used for the profitable growing of all kinds of poultry, including turkeys and water fowl. This could be done by thousands of people in a small way, but whenever a matter of this kind is contemplated, there is too much of an inclination to imagine that there should be thousands of them to start with, and that it should be a mammoth company instead of a small individual plant, managed by an energetic father and mother, aided by one or two children.

BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCK

"Will you kindly stop my advt. in the bantam column of the Fancier at once as it has completely sold me out of bantams, and the inquiries are coming in so fast yet that it keeps me busy answering them. Will you kindly send me my bill so that I can pay it, and so wishing you continued success, I am, yours respectfully, L. W. Pinckney, Auburn, N. J.

About the A. P. A.

There seems to have been considerable competition both for the office of president and secretary-treasurer at the Cincinnati meeting of the American Poultry Association, Mr. Curtis receiving twenty-nine votes for president, and Mr. Eugene Sites nineteen votes, while for secretary-treasurership Mr. T. E. Orr received thirty-three votes, and Mr. Theo. Hewes thirty-two. This has a thrifty appearance and leads one to believe that the barrier of locality has been broken and in future the officers may be selected for their value and worth to the association.

The treasury is reported to have a balance of four thousand dollars. Fifteen thousand copies of the Standard have been printed and twelve thousand sold. After a new edition comes from the press, perhaps in six months or a year, anyone may purchase them in dozen lots for eighty cents per copy. The salary of the secretary-treasurer will be six hundred dollars per year from now on. None too much if he properly attends to the business of the association and keeps things in shipshape. There was a large number of new members added to the association at the Cincinnati meeting. In the future the vote for the coming meeting must be taken before the end of May.

The Albany Show

The Albany, N. Y., Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Club held its second annual exhibition at State Armory, and proved to be a success, some two thousand birds, pigeons and pet stock being shown. Under the able management of President S. R. Davenport and N. D. Ford, Superintendent, birds were cooped and cared for to the satisfaction of all exhibitors.

The birds were a fine lot, some deserving special mention. Gedney Farm, Frank Gaylor's birds, won first, second and third on all entries, winning silver cup offered by country gentleman. The Silver Wyandotte shown by Chas. Craig winning first on finest open laced bird. Ford Bros'. Lakenvelder cock, a New York winner, again won first. President Davenport had the largest and finest display of White Wyandottes.

Pigeons at Boston

In the language of one of the oldest exhibitors of pigeons, "Boston had a great pigeon show." Every variety of pigeons was strongly represented, the classes being remarkably large, competition overly keen; judging well done, and exhibitors satisfied. To go over the list of several hundred kinds and varieties of pigeons and describe them all would take more time and space than could be possibly devoted to them.

Every class had its representation of quality, every class had its admirers, and every variety was worthy of mention; but when we have said that the display of pigeons at Boston could not have been excelled, we have said as much as could be said, without going into the details of a minute description.

SHOWS AND SHOW AWARDS

Silver Duckwing Game Bantam at New York

Of the five cocks entered the first was well placed, of fine station and style with nice top color and wing breast a trifle ticked. In all being of the fine game type. The second was lower on pins than first, also coarser and a bit long in wings. Color was not so good, but has plenty of tail. Third is long in wing with short neck and color fair. Fourth was best shaped bird in class. An old ringer of the true game style, but gone in color. Fine reach and great shoulders and width should have won third place. Fifth was best colored bird in class, but there he stops having no style or shape.

Three hens were entered, the first being a wonder, fine in shape and color with great wings and nice station. Second was a nice little bird of fine color, but a bit longer on back than first and a bit proud in tail. Third was in poor condition, but a nice breeder.

The first of the two cockerels entered was a fine Stag of fine color and station with good shoulders, but a bit full in hackle and tail and a trifle low in stern. Second was not in it with first, being too coarse; also high in tail and ticked in the breast.

Three pullets made up the entry in that class, the first being the finest Duckwing pullet I have ever seen, a little dream of fine color and shape with good station and plenty of style.

Second was a fine little pullet but has not the station or style of first, but color was very good. Third was close on heels of second, richer in color and good in shape. In all the silvers were a fine class, in fact as good as have been out on this side of the pond.—H. Rowedder.

Buff Wyandottes at New York

Cocks were six in number, first being a very even colored bird of fair type. Second, third and fourth were all very good birds. Number 1077, owned by Pensyl, a model in type, and the best colored bird in the class, should have been an easy winner, but was left out on account of rough legs. Number 1076, belonging to Scott (unplaced), was better than some of the winners. Hens numbered seven, first being a nice blocky hen of very good color and good head points. Second, third and fourth were all good. Fifth, owned by Pensyl, was easily the best hen in the class, being of good size, with good head, fine shape in every way, except that neck was a little small, caused by hackle feathers not being fully out. Color was the finest of any buff bird in the show.

Nine Cockerels were entered, first, second and third all good birds, with very little to choose between them. Third had the best type head, and surface color, but has some dark in wings and tail. Pullets made up a class of ten. First was nice in type, but had too much dark in tail. We preferred the second and fifth to any in the class. The only pen shown was very nice and even colored. Buff Wyandottes were not as numerous as we had hoped to see them.—Andrew Riddell.

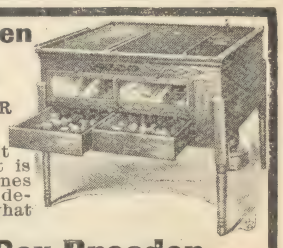
HATCH WITH A STAR



And be certain of success. Heat, ventilation and moisture, the three great essentials to incubation, are the strong points in the Star Incubator. Its patented features to control these elements put it away ahead of all others and insure STAR HATCHES. Catalog explains how chick drawer — contained in no other— works. Read it and you'll see why the Star outshines others.

PRAIRIE STATE Combination Hen Egg and Duck Egg Incubator

This combination IMPROVED STANDARD PRAIRIE STATE INCUBATOR is constructed with extra deep egg chambers and nursery drawers, adapting it to the requirements of duck raisers without interfering in the least with its efficiency for hatching broilers and soft roasters. It has cooling slides on top which dispense with cooling tables, and it is made in RIGHTS and LEFTS to utilize floor space, allowing four machines to be worked in a solid block. The STANDARD INCUBATOR BOOK describes its many desirable features at length,--you'll want to know what they are. Write for the book.

Martin's White Wyandottes won more prizes than any other exhibitor. First and Third Cockerel, First and Third Pullet, Second Cock, Second Hen and Second Pen. This was a remarkable win, owing to the fact that previous to this show they had been cooped nearly two weeks at the Toronto Show, and thus were not in as good condition as the birds they competed with.

World's Champion Wyandottes

Golden, Partridge, Whites and Columbians
Madison Square Garden, 1906

The President's Solid Silver Cup, value $100, for Best Wyandotte Cock, Hen, Cockerel and Pullet in Show. 810 Wyandottes Shown

I HAVE furnished winners in Whites three years in succession, Partridge three years, and have won three years on Goldens, making a clean sweep this year. Birds direct from my yards have won more prizes at Madison Square, St. Louis, Boston and Chicago, the past three years than from any other breeder. My birds have free range on twelve different farms.

WHY NOT COME TO HEADQUARTERS?

Four pens White Wyandottes of America's best and the kind that breed winners.

Six pens Partridge, as good stock as there is bred.

Eight pens Goldens, open laced all over.

Two pens Columbians. Extra fine. Shown twice. Won all firsts.

Single Birds, Trios or Breeding Yards.
Eggs by the sitting or hundred.
Telephone. Circular. A pleasure to show stock.
Stock shipped on approval.
All infertile eggs replaced free of charge.
